DANGER FROM FLIES.

Warning Sent Out by the State Board of Health.

Many people of Wisconsin, as well as the local municipal authorities have failed to heed the numerous warnings that have been issued against house flies.

It is a known fact, and many times attention has been called to this, that flies are one of the most dangerous menaces to life and health with which mankind has to contend. It is responsible for a large proportion of all cases of typhoid fever, diarrheal diseases of infants, many cases of tuberculosis, and in fact practically every infectious and contagious disease can be and is transmitted either by the common house fly or house fly.

Yellow fever is transmitted by a certain species of mosquito. Destroy the breeding place of these mosquitoes, and yellow fever disappears. Another species of mosquito is directly responsible for the transmission of malaria.
Destroy the breeding places of this species of mosquito and malaria disappears.

It has been demonstrated by Prof.
M. J. Rosenau of Harvard University, and given to the public at a meeting of the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography at Washington, September 28th, 1912, that he had succeeded in transmitting Anterior Polio-myelitis, or more commonly known as Infantile Paralysis, from monkeys sick with this disease to well monkeys by the bite of the common biting fly, more generally known as the barn fly, or Stomoxys Calcitrans.

In 1908, observations made by the State Board of Health of Wisconsin, during the epidemic of Infantile Paralysis in this state, proved that undoubtedly the fly was a factor in transmitting this disease.

The State Board of Health of Massachusetts made similar observations and later the transmission of this disease in monkeys through the bite of flies has been definitely proven.

The female fly lays her eggs in filth,
one hundred and twenty in number.
In less than twenty-four hours, these eggs become maggots. In six days these maggots reach the pupa stage, and five days later are full-fledged flies beginning their work of death.
It is estimated that the progeny of a single pair in one season is one sextillion (1,000,000,000,000,000,000).

Potato Brand.

The over production of potatoes in Germany in the last few years has resulted in the discovery of new ways of utilizing the surplus. According to recent information, there are now 436 factories devoted to the preparation of potato products. The tubers are prepared for use as cattle fodder or for the production of alcohol and starch. A yellowish white flour is also milled. German bakers are mixing this flour with the ordinary flour of wheat and rye. The product is said to be a bread of excellent taste, which is easy of digestion and remains fresh for a longer time than the bread in common use.—Harper's Weekly.

WAS SHORT BUT EXCITING

Two Men Have Narrow Escape When Team of Bronchos Makes a Wild Dash.

Daniel Delius, a piano tuner, is in Riverview hospital as the result of a short but exciting runaway that occurred Tuesday morning about 8:30 o'clock.

Mr. Delius was in the rig with George Forrand, who carries the mail on R. D. No. 1, and they were on their way north on the main street when the team of bronchos were frightened by the dropping of the tongue of the buggy. As they started away the buggy was overturned and dragged along the ground with the two men underneath.

Luckily the top broke from the buggy, releasing the two men, and the team was soon stopped. While Mr.
Forrand escaped without any serious injury, Mr. Delius was pretty badly battered up, his most serious hurt being a place above the knee of one leg, where it was stated that the flesh was torn off to the bone. He was picked up and taken to Dr. Tomaszewski's office where temporary repairs were made, when it was found that he had suffered several bruises and concussions, and he was taken to Riverview hospital.

Mr. Forrand's rig was smashed up to a considerable extent, but he secured another and continued on his way with the mail with only a slight delay.

DEATH OF HENRY EDWARDS.

Old Resident and Civil War Veteran Passes Away.

Henry Edwards, who had been a resident of this city for forty years or more, died on Tuesday at his home on the east side after an illness of some length, due to the infirmities of old age. Deceased was 74 years of age and is survived by his wife, who is also in rather feeble health.

Mr. Edwards came to this city soon after the close of the Civil War, at which time he was driving stage horses between this place and New Lisbon. He later engaged in the livery business, but retired from this a number of years ago. He was a member of the local Grand Army Post, having served as a member of the 20 light artillery, Wisconsin Volunteers, during the Civil war.

The funeral will be held on Thursday from the Methodist church, Rev.
H. C. Logan to conduct the services.

Illegal Fishing.

Game Warden Will Cole of Vesper, tried to arrest two men near the Northwestern bridge on Saturday evening, they having some fish in their possession which the game warden suspected were not the kind that the law permits to be caught at this time of the year. The men threw the fish in the river and then made a race for liberty. The fishermen were more speedy than the game warden and the result was that they made their escape.

Child Breaks an Arm.

The nine year old son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Weatherwax, who live on the corner of Oak and Tenth street, had the misfortune to break an arm on Sunday while playing with some companions. The parents of the child moved here last week. Mr. Weather-wax being the representative of a La-Crosse Oil Co.

Broke an Arm.

Wm. Alwarden, who was working on one of the Arpa dredges at Cranmore, had his right arm broken on Monday. He was brought to this city and a surgeon reduced the fracture, and he has since been getting along all right.

Simon Wortund of the town of Sigel
was a pleasant caller at the Tribune office on Monday. Mr. Wortund came in to give us a piece of his mind for saying anything derogatory to the Vesper road as it now exists, explaining that this road was built before most of the present generation was born, and that as a consequence the present generation is not altogether to blame for the existing conditions. In the good old days, when the getting out of lumber and other wood products was about the only industry that was pursued to any extent by the inhabitants of Central Wisconsin, it was customary to build a road that would serve the immediate needs of the people.
Thru low lands and marshy places, and there were many of them in those days, the easiest way to solve the road problem was to build one of the old fashioned corduroys. A corduroy road was never very good, but then it had the advantage of being navigable at all times of the year, and while many of our ancestors had their back teeth jarred loose twice a day in passing over these roads, still they beat being stuck in the mud all to pieces, and the corduroys served their purpose. Then as the country began to settle up and merchants commenced to farm the high places, dirt was hauled onto the old corduroys so as to smooth them up a bit and make them more passable.
They were not boulevards in their most palmy days, but one could get over them with a load of hay if he was not in too much of a hurry. Then the farmers commenced to drain their lands and the logs began to wear out in places and when the wheel of a wagon dropped thru one of the spots where a log or two was missing it generally broke all the eggs in the back end of the wagon and caused the farmer to say things that would not look well in print. Then the logs would not stay put, either. As each season passed by they kept working to the surface of the road and it was necessary to pick them up. That is the condition of affairs out toward Vesper.
The logs are still coming to the surface, and if they would all come up in one year, it would not be such an awful lot of work to get them out, but just a few come up each year and they keep the road rough and have a tendency to spoil any permanent road work that might otherwise be attempted. Sigel is not the only town in the state that is afflicted with worn out corduroy roads, by any means, and it is doubtful if the thing had to be done
all over again, if any better method could be devised for building a temporary highway thru a new country where the natural drainage was poor.

DEATH OF MRS. HERSCHLEB.

Young Mother Passes Away After He-raltle Battle With Tuberculosis.

Mrs. Edna Muir Herschleib, wife of Wilbur Herschleib, died at the home of her parents early Friday morning, after a sickness of about seven months from tuberculosis. Mrs. Herschleib was taken sick last fall and after her case was diagnosed as tuberculosis she was taken to the sanitarium at Wales for treatment. Here everything possible was done for her, but she continued to fail until a few weeks ago she was brought home, it being realized that it was impossible to save her life.

Deceased was born at Winona on the 24th of October, 1859, and would consequently have been 54 years of age at her next birthday. She came to this city with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Muir, and grew to womanhood here and graduated from the local high school with the class of 1907.
On June 15th, 1909, she was married to Wilbur Herschleib, and is survived by the husband and two boys, one two years old and one eight months. She is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Gilbert Marvin, one brother, Kirk Muir, and her parents. Her death at this time was certainly a most untimely one, and her family have the sympathy of the community in their sad affliction.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon, services being conducted at the home and later at the Episcopal church, of which she was a member.
Rev. A. C. Pfeiderer conducting the services.

Provisions are More Liberal to Owners

The men who furnish the material for building have for years been getting the best of it. This new bill that has passed the legislature changes the security of a material man as regards materials sold to a person for building or repair purposes and which is much more liberal to the real estate owner than the present law.

Under existing statutes if any material man furnishes material to a contractor and the contractor fails to pay for such materials the material man can file a notice of a lien and foreclose for his debts upon the property.

The new law changes this and provides that if a material man is worried about the reliability of a contractor who is buying materials of him for improvements on any property that the material man must, within ten days after furnishing the materials, serve a notice on the owner of the property that he shall hold him responsible for the goods furnished and thus give him notice not to pay the main contractor until a settlement has been reached between the main contractor and the material man for the materials furnished for the improvement.

If this notice is not served within ten days the material man has no lien and no security against the property attached for any material furnished unless the notice is served, thus giving property owners a chance to protect themselves in dealings with an unreliable main contractor.

But Few Guide Boards.

There is a law on the statute books of Wisconsin that is not being enforced very rigidly. It is that relating to the putting up of guide boards at road intersections and crossings. In some towns the law has been observed but in many others there has been no attempt made to erect the guides. The law was passed by the 1909 legislature.
Persons traveling through unfamiliar country are often forced to drive long distances out of their way or stop frequently to inquire the way, when a few guide boards would make this unnecessary. Automobile clubs in the state have taken the matter up and will send out notices to town chairmen and other officials whose duty it is to see that the law in this regard is enforced.

Hurt in Auto Accident.

Wm. F. Neff was brought to this city from City Point Saturday night and placed in Riverview hospital where he has since been recovering from some bruises he received in an automobile accident. Mr. Neff, in company with some other gentlemen, was riding in an auto near City Point
when the machine ran into a ditch, turning over. While Mr. Neff was quite badly bruised up he had no bones broken and will soon be able to be about again. The automobile the men were riding in was a Ford touring car, which was smashed up somewhat, but after being righted, was in such condition that the men continued their trip to this city, bringing the injured man with them.

Curtis Store Sold.

Chas. H. Curtis has sold his stock of goods in the Curtis Variety store to E. L. and S. W. Howard, and the new proprietors took charge of the place on Tuesday. Mr. Curtis intends to go west to look up a location to engage in business.

Herman Hill of the town of Seneca, has exchanged his 120 acre farm in the town of Seneca for four houses in Kaukauna belonging to Henry Mau.
Mr. Mau will take possession of the farm in the near future. The exchange was made thru the Ginsburg agency.
James E. Gillespie, the district engineer, who has charge of the state highway construction in the fourth district, arrived in the city the forepart of the week and has opened an office in the court house. His work will extend over the counties of Wood,
Lincoln, Marathon, Portage, Waupaca, Waushara, Adams and Juneau. There will be a surveyor, a draftsman and an inspector stationed here, under Mr. Gillespie. As these men will oversee all the work done in the fourth district they will necessarily have to do considerable traveling to cover the territory properly.

Among the laws passed by the state legislature are two which have a local interest, in that they apply to the sale of liquor, etc., to persons who have been "posted". The law provides that any saloon keeper who shall allow persons to whom they have been for-bidden to sell liquor, or any minor, to loaf about their premises, shall be subject to fine and imprisonment. The other law provides that any supervisor alderman, mayor and county superintendent may renew the prohibition against the sale of liquor to persons known to be habitual drunkards from year to year as they see fit.

ON MOVING THE STATE FAIR

Opinion of Our Assemblyman D. D.
Conway on the Matter Under Consideration.

The committee that has under consideration the removal of the state fair from Milwaukee, have been in the cream city the fore part of the week looking over the premises for the purpose of giving an intelligent answer on the subject. The following views on the subject were expressed by D. D. Conway, assemblyman from Wood County which is taken from the Milwaukee News:

"Personally I do not know and reason why the state fair should be taken away from Milwaukee," said D. D.
Conway of Grand Rapids, a member of the committee. "We will know more about it after we have been out to look over the fair grounds."

"Asked if he is not already thoroughly familiar with the conditions at the grounds, he said, 'I have only been there twice, and I know very little about the grounds and buildings. I have come to the city year after year, intending to visit the fair, and after standing on corners watching packed cars go by, I'd decide to remain down town.' Hundreds of people do the same. On both occasions when I did go out it took me two hours to get down town after leaving the grounds.
But I do not know that any other city can offer better transportation facilities."

Mr. Conway said some exhibitors complain that provision for stock costs an excessively high price here, and that complaints have been registered about delays in transporting stock over the railroads.

This matter of moving the state fair is quite a serious proposition. While there may be some serious drawbacks to the city of Milwaukee, the question naturally arises as to whether any other city in the state could handle it any better. If a city like Milwaukee is taxed to its utmost to handle the crowd, what would any other city do with the same number of people? Any man who looks at the matter from an unbiased viewpoint will admit that no other city in the state would pull the crowd that Milwaukee does. They may not all go out to the fair grounds, but a whole lot of people go there just the same and a goodly number manage to get out to the grounds in some way, notwithstanding the fact that the cars are pretty badly crowded at all times while the fair is in session.

EASTERN STAR DOINGS

A Large Number Come Over From Stevens Point to Participate.

About seventy-five members of the Eastern Star lodge from Stevens Point came to this city last Wednesday to participate in the festivities held by the local lodge, and according to all reports a very pleasant time was had by those present. The visitors came over on a special train from Stevens Point and were thus enabled to attend the affair and get back home to gain the same night, which made it possible for a great many more to come than they would have done otherwise.

The evening's entertainment opened with a banquet and this part started in about 6:30 o'clock, and there were in the neighborhood of 175 seated at the tables. There were speeches both by the local members and the visitors.

At the conclusion of the banquet several new members were initiated into the order, they being Misses Ruth Horton, Lucille Church, Faye Warner and Mary Jones. After the new members were initiated those present indulged in a general visit among themselves and a very pleasant hour was spent. Both the visitors and the local members stated that it was one of the most pleasant evenings ever held by the local lodge.

DANGER FROM FLIES.

Warning Sent Out by the State Board of Health.

Many people of Wisconsin, as well as the local municipal authorities have failed to heed the numerous warnings that have been issued against house flies.

It is a known fact, and many times attention has been called to this, that flies are one of the most dangerous menaces to life and health, with which mankind has to contend. It is responsible for a large proportion of all cases of typhoid fever, diarrheal diseases of infants, many cases of tuberculosis, and in fact practically every infectious and contagious disease can be and is transmitted either by the common barn fly or house fly.

Yellow fever is transmitted by a certain species of mosquito. Destroy the breeding place of these mosquitoes, and yellow fever disappears. Another species of mosquito is directly responsible for the transmission of malaria. Destroy the breeding places of this species of mosquito and malaria disappears.

It has been demonstrated by Prof. M. J. Roseau of Harvard University, and given to the public at a meeting of the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography at Washington, September 26th, 1912, that he had succeeded in transmitting Anterior Poliomyelitis, or more commonly known as Infantile Paralysis, from monkeys sick with this disease to well monkeys by the bite of the common biting fly, more generally known as the barn fly, or Stomoxys calcitrans.

In 1908, observations made by the State Board of Health of Wisconsin, during the epidemic of Infantile Paralysis in this state, proved that undoubtedly the fly was a factor in transmitting this disease.

The State Board of Health of Massachusetts made similar observations and later, the transmission of this disease in monkeys through the bite of flies has been definitely proven.

The female fly lays her eggs in filth, one hundred and twenty in number. In less than twenty-four hours, these eggs become maggots. In six days these maggots reach the pupa stage, and five days later are full-fledged flies beginning their work of death. Potato Brand.

The over production of potatoes in Germany in the last few years has resulted in the discovery of new ways of utilizing the surplus. According to recent information, there are now 450 factories devoted to the preparation of potato products. The tubers are prepared for use as cattle fodder or for the production of alcohol and starch. A yellowish white flour is also milled. German bakers are mixing this flour with the ordinary flour of wheat and rye. The product is said to be a bread of excellent taste, which is easy of digestion and remains fresh for a longer time than the bread in common use.—Harper's Weekly.

WAS SHORT BUT EXCITING

Two Men Have Narrow Escape When Team of Bronchos Makes a Wild Dash.

Daniel Deluas, a piano tuner, is in Riverview hospital as the result of a short but exciting runaway that occurred Tuesday morning about 8:30 o'clock.

Mr. Deluas was in the rig with George Forrand, who carries the mail on E. D. No. 1, and they were on their way north on the main street when the team of bronchos were frightened by the dropping of the tongue of the buggy. As they started away, though, they were caught and dragged along the ground with the two men underneath.

Luckily the top broke from the buggy, releasing the two men, and the team was soon stopped. While Mr. Forrand escaped without any serious injury, Mr. Deluas was pretty badly battered up, his most serious hurt being a place above the knee of one leg, where it was stated that the flesh was torn off to the bone. He was picked up and taken to Dr. Remond's office, where temporary repairs were made, when it was found that he had suffered several bruises and contusions, and he was taken to Riverview hospital.

Mr. Forrand's rig was smashed up to a considerable extent, but he secured another and continued on his way with the mail with only a slight delay.

DEATH OF HENRY EDWARDS.

Old Resident and Civil War Veteran Passes Away.

Henry Edwards, who had been a resident of this city for forty years or more, died on Tuesday at his home on the east side after an illness of some length, due to the infirmities of old age. Deceased was 74 years of age and is survived by his wife, who is also in rather feeble health.

Mr. Edwards came to this city soon after the close of the Civil War, at which time he was driving stage between this place and New Glarus. He later engaged in the livery business, but retired from this a number of years ago. He was a member of the local Grand Army Post, having served as a member of the 2d light artillery, Wisconsin Volunteers, during the Civil war.

The funeral will be held on Thursday from the Methodist church, Rev. H. C. Logan to conduct the services.

Illegal Fishing.

Game Warden Will Cole of Vesper, tried to arrest two men near the Northwestern bridge on Saturday evening, they having some fish in their possession which the game warden suspected were not the kind that the law permits to be caught at this time of the year. The men threw the fish in the river and then made a race for liberty. The fishermen were more speedy than the game warden and the case.

Child Breaks an Arm.

The nine year old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Weatherwax, who live on the corner of Oak and Tenth street, had the misfortune to break an arm on Sunday while playing with some companions. The parents of the child moved here last week. Mr. Weatherwax being the representative of a Lacrosse Oil Co.

Broke an Arm.

Wm. Alwarden, who was working on one of the Arpin dredges at Cranmoor, had his right arm broken on Monday. He was brought to this city and a surgeon reduced the fracture, and he has since been getting along all right.

Simon Worlund of the town of Sigel was a pleasant caller at the Tribune office on Monday. Mr. Worlund came in to give us a place of his mind for saying anything derogatory to the Vesper road as it now exists, explaining that this road was built before most of the present generation was born, and that as a consequence the present generation is not altogether to blame for the existing conditions. In the good old days, when the getting out of lumber and other wood products was about the only industry that was pursued to any extent by the inhabitants of Central Wisconsin, it was customary to build a road that would serve the immediate needs of the people, then lowlands and marshy places, and there were many of them in those days, the easiest way to solve the road problem was to build one of the old fashioned corduroys. A corduroy road was never very good, but then it had the advantage of being navigable at all times of the year, and while many of our ancestors had their back teeth jarred loose twice a day in passing over these roads, still they beat being stuck in the mud all to pieces, and the corduroys served their purpose. Then as the country began to settle up, and men commenced to farm the high places, dirt was hauled onto the old corduroys so as to smooth them up a bit and make them more passable. They were not boulevards in their most palmy days, but one could get over them with a load of hay if he was not in too much of a hurry. Then the farmers commenced to drain their lands and the logs began to wear out in places and when the wheel of a wagon dropped thru one of the spots where a log or two was missing it generally broke all the eggs in the back end of the wagon and caused the driver to say things that would not look well in print. Then the logs would not stay put, either. As each season passed by they kept working to the surface of the road and it was necessary to pick them up. That is the condition of affairs out toward Vesper. The logs are still coming to the surface, and if they would all come up in one year, it would not be such an awful lot of work to get them out, but just a few come up each year and they keep the road rough and have a tendency to spoil any permanent road work that might otherwise be attempted. Such is the only town in the state that is afflicted with worn out corduroy roads, by any means, and it is doubtful if the thing had to be done all over again. If any better method could be devised for building a temporary highway thru a new country, where the natural drainage was poor.

DEATH OF MRS. HERSCHLEB.

Young Mother Passes Away After Her Battle With Tuberculosis.

Mrs. Edna Muir Herschleib, wife of Wilbur Herschleib, died at the home of her parents early Friday morning, after a sickness of about seven months from tuberculosis. Mrs. Herschleib was taken sick last fall and after her case was diagnosed as tuberculosis she was taken to the sanitarium at Wales for treatment. Here everything possible was done for her, but she continued to fall until a few weeks ago she was brought home, it being realized that it was impossible to save her life.

Deceased was born at Winona on the 24th of October, 1889, and would consequently have been 24 years of age at her next birthday. She came to this city with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Muir, and grew to womanhood here and graduated from the local high school with the class of 1907. On June 15th, 1909, she was married to Wilbur Herschleib, and is survived by the husband and two boys, one two years old and one eight months. Mrs. Herschleib was a most untimely one, and her family have the sympathy of the community in their sad affliction.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon, services being conducted at the home and later at the Episcopal church, of which she was a member. Rev. A. C. Fiedler, conducting the services.

The men who furnish the material for building have for years been getting the best of it. The new bill that has passed the legislature changes the security of a material man as regards materials sold to a person for building or repair purposes and which is much more liberal to the real estate owner than the present law.

Under existing statutes if any material man furnishes material to a contractor and the contractor fails to pay for such materials the material man can file a notice of a lien and foreclose for his debts upon the property.

The new law changes this and provides that if a material man is worried about the reliability of a contractor who is buying materials of him for improvements on any property that the material man must, within ten days after furnishing the materials, serve a notice on the owner of the property that he shall hold him responsible for the goods furnished and thus give him notice not to pay the main contractor until a settlement has been reached between the main contractor and the material man for the materials furnished for the improvement.

If this notice is not served within ten days the material man has no lien and no security against the property. The new law is a good one, giving property owners a chance to protect themselves in dealings with an unreliable main contractor.

But Few Guide Boards.

There is a law on the statute books of Wisconsin that is not being enforced very rigidly. It is that relating to the putting up of guide boards at road intersections and crossings. In some towns the law has been observed but in many others there has been no attempt made to erect the guides. The law was passed by the 1909 legislature. Persons traveling through unfamiliar country are often forced to drive long distances out of their way or stop frequently to inquire the way, when a few guide boards would make this unnecessary. Automobile clubs in the state have taken the matter up and will send out notices to town chairmen and other officials whose duty it is to see that the law in this regard is enforced.

Hurt in Auto Accident.

Wm. F. Neht was brought to this city from City Point Saturday night and placed in Riverview hospital where he has since been recovering from some bruises he received in an automobile accident. Mr. Neht, in company with some other gentlemen, was riding in an auto near City Point when the machine ran into a ditch, turning over. While Mr. Neht was quite badly bruised up he had no bones broken and will soon be able to be about again. The automobile the men were riding in was a Ford touring car, which was smashed up somewhat, but after being righted, was in such condition that the men continued their trip to this city, bringing the injured man with them.

Curtis Store Sold.

Chas. H. Curtis has sold his stock of goods in the Curtis Variety store to E. L. and S. W. Howard, and the new proprietors took charge of the place on Tuesday. Mr. Curtis intends to go west to look up a location to engage in business.

Herman Hill of the town of Seneca, has exchanged his 120 acre farm in the town of Seneca for four houses in Kaukauna, belonging to Henry Mau. Mr. Mau will take possession of the farm in the near future. The exchange was made thru the Ginsburg agency.

James E. Gillespie, the district engineer, who has charge of the state highway construction in the fourth district, arrived in the city the fore part of the week and has opened an office in the court house. His work will extend over the counties of Wood, Lincoln, Marathon, Portage, Waupaca, Waushara, Adams and Juneau. There will also be a surveyor, a draftsman and an inspector stationed here, under Mr. Gillespie. As these men will oversee all the work done in the fourth district they will necessarily have to do considerable traveling to cover the territory properly.

Among the laws passed by the state legislature are two which have a local interest, in that they apply to the sale of liquor, etc., to persons who have been "posted." The law provides that any saloon keeper who shall allow persons to whom they shall allow to be sold liquor, or any minor, to loaf about their premises, shall be subject to fine and imprisonment. The other law provides that any supervisor, alderman, mayor and county superintendent may renew the prohibition against the sale of liquor to persons known to be habitual drunkards from year to year as they see fit.

Opinion of Our Assemblyman D. D. Conway on the Matter Under Consideration.

The committee that has under consideration the removal of the state fair from Milwaukee, have been in the Cream City the fore part of the week looking over the premises for the purpose of giving an intelligent answer on the subject. The following views on the subject were expressed by D. D. Conway, assemblyman from Wood County which is taken from the Milwaukee News:

"Personally I do not know and reason why the state fair should be taken away from Milwaukee," said D. D. Conway of Grand Rapids, a member of the committee. "We will know more about it after we have been out to look over the fair grounds."

Asked if he is not already thoroughly familiar with the conditions at the grounds, he said: "I have only been there twice, and I know very little about the grounds and buildings. I have come to the city year after year, intending to visit the fair, and after standing on corners watching packed cars go by, I'd decide to remain down town. Hundreds of people do the same. On both occasions when I did go out it took me two hours to get down town after leaving the grounds. But I do not know that any other city can offer better transportation facilities."

Mr. Conway said some exhibitors complain that provision for stock costs an excessively high price here, and that complaints have been registered about delays in transporting stock over the railroads.

This matter of moving the state fair is quite a serious proposition. While there may be some serious drawbacks to the city of Milwaukee, the question naturally arises as to whether any other city in the state could handle it any better. If a city like Milwaukee is taxed to its utmost to handle the crowd, what would any other city do with the same number of people? Any man who looks at the matter from an unbiased viewpoint will admit that no other city in the state would pull the crowd that Milwaukee does. They may not all go out to the fair grounds, but a whole lot of people go there just the same and a goodly number manage to get out to the grounds in some way, notwithstanding the fact that the cars are pretty badly crowded at all times while the fair is in session.

EASTERN STAR DOINGS

A Large Number Come Over From Stevens Point to Participate.

About seventy-five members of the Eastern Star lodge from Stevens Point came to this city last Wednesday to participate in the festivities held by the local lodge, and according to all reports a very pleasant time was had by those present. The visitors came over on a special train from Stevens Point and were thus enabled to attend the affair and get back home again the same night, which made it possible for a great many more to come than they would have done otherwise.

The evening's entertainment opened with a banquet and this part started in about 6:30 o'clock, and there were in the neighborhood of 175 seated at the tables. There were speeches both by the local members and the visitors.

At the conclusion of the banquet several new members were initiated into the order, they being Grace Ruth Horton, Luella Church, Flossie Warner and Mary Jones. After the new members were initiated those present indulged in a general visit among themselves and a very pleasant hour was spent. Both the visitors and the local members stated that it was one of the most pleasant evenings ever held by the local lodge.

Indian Materials Wanted.

The State Historical Museum at Madison, Wisconsin, is making an effort to increase its archaeological collections and requests the assistance of public spirited citizens who have the opportunity to do so to contribute specimens to them. At this time of the year, in cultivating fields, old Indian stones and other implements are frequently found. These are as a general rule of little value to the finder but when properly labeled and placed in cases in the state collections become of educational value to thousands of visitors.

Articles of dress and personal adornment and implements made and used by the present Wisconsin tribes will be greatly appreciated. All gifts will be appropriately acknowledged to the donors.

Consolidation of Country Schools.

The interest in consolidation is constantly growing. Inquiries frequently come to the Department of Education for literature on the subject, and calls are often made for some one from the department to attend meetings for the purpose of discussing the proposition. During the year the Committee of Fifteen prepared a bulletin on the subject dealing especially with such phases as may be of interest to Wisconsin people. This bulletin is for free distribution and may be obtained by writing to the State Superintendent.

In localities where the schools are very small the discussion of this topic is especially timely. There are many small schools located in the older sections of the state where transportation is feasible.

Death of W. H. Ridgman.

Deceased was 83 years of age and a veteran of the Civil war, and although he lived here for 10 years, was not very well known, owing to the fact that he was incapacitated about a year ago by a stroke of paralysis, since which time he has been confined to the house all the time.

Dr. and Mrs. Ridgman went to Bay City to attend the funeral, which was held on Thursday.

George Moulton, the mason, broke one of the bones in his left leg near the ankle on Monday while at work on the D. B. Phillips residence on South Third Street. He was descending from the scaffolding and in stepping down he placed his foot on the edge of a board which turned over and allowed his whole weight to come onto the member. He was taken home and a surgeon reduced the fracture, but it will be a month or six weeks before he will be able to use the foot to any extent.

DANGER FROM FLIES.

Warning Sent Out by the State Board of Health.

Many people of Wisconsin, as well as the local municipal authorities, have failed to heed the numerous warnings that have been issued against house flies.

It is a known fact, and many times attention has been called to this, that flies are one of the most dangerous menaces to life and health with which mankind has to contend. It is responsible for a large proportion of all cases of typhoid fever, diarrheal diseases of infants, many cases of tuberculosis, and in fact practically every infectious and contagious disease can be and is transmitted either by the common house fly or house fly.

Yellow fever is transmitted by a certain species of mosquito. Destroy the breeding place of these mosquitoes, and yellow fever disappears. Another species of mosquito is directly responsible for the transmission of malaria. Destroy the breeding places of this species of mosquito and malaria disappears.

It has been demonstrated by Prof. M. J. Rosenau of Harvard University, and given to the public at a meeting of the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography at Washington, September 26th, 1912, that he had succeeded in transmitting Anterior Poliomyelitis, or more commonly known as Infantile Paralysis, from monkeys sick with the disease to well monkeys by the bite of the common utility fly, more generally known as the house fly, or Stomoxys calcitrans.

In 1903, observations made by the State Board of Health of Wisconsin, during the epidemic of Infantile Paralysis in this state, proved that undoubtedly the fly was a factor in transmitting this disease.

The State Board of Health of Massachusetts made similar observations and later the transmission of this disease in monkeys through the bite of flies has been definitely proven.

The female fly lays her eggs in filth, and hundreds and thousands of them in less than twenty-four hours, these eggs become maggots. In six days these maggots reach the pupa stage, and five days later are full-fledged flies beginning their work of death. It is estimated that the progeny of a single pair in one season is one sextillion. (1,000,000,000,000,000,000,000).

DEATH OF HENRY EDWARDS.

Old Resident and Civil War Veteran Passes Away.

Henry Edwards, who had been a resident of this city for forty years or more, died Tuesday at his home on the west side after an illness of some length, due to the infirmities of old age. Deceased was 74 years of age and is survived by his wife, who is also in rather feeble health.

Mr. Edwards came to this city soon after the close of the Civil War, at which time he was driving stage between this place and New Lisbon. He later engaged in the livery business, but retired from this a number of years ago. He was a member of the local Grand Army Post, having served as a member of the 2d light artillery, Wisconsin Volunteers, during the Civil war.

The funeral will be held on Thursday from the Methodist church, Rev. H. C. Logan to conduct the services.

Illegal Fishing.

Game Warden Will Cole of Vesper, tried to arrest two men near the Northwestern bridge on Saturday evening, they having some fish in their possession which the game warden suspected were not the kind that the law permits to be caught at this time of the year. The men threw the fish in the river and then made a race for liberty. The fishermen were taken to the game warden and the result was that they made their escape.

Broke an Arm.

Wm. Alwarden, who was working on one of the Arpin dredges at Cranmoor, had his right arm broken on Monday. He was brought to this city and a surgeon reduced the fracture, and he has since been getting along all right.

Simon Worlund of the town of Sigel was a pleasant caller at the Tribune office on Monday. Mr. Worlund came in to give us a piece of his mind for saying anything derogatory to the Vesper road as it now exists, explaining that this road was built before the present generation was born, and that as a consequence the present generation is not altogether to blame for the existing conditions. In the good old days, when the getting out of lumber and other wood products was about the only industry that was pursued to any extent by the inhabitants of Central Wisconsin, there was customarily a road that would serve the immediate needs of the people, thru low lands and marshy places, and there were many of them in those days, the easiest way to solve the road problem was to build one of the old fashioned corduroys. A corduroy road was never very good, but then it had the advantage of being navigable at all times of the year, and while many of our ancestors had their back teeth jarred loose twice a day in passing over these roads, still they beat being stuck in the mud all to pieces, and the corduroys served their purpose. Then as the country began to settle up and men commenced to farm, the high places were built up, and the low places were smoothed them up a bit and make them more passable. They were not boulevards in their most palmy days, but one could get over them with a load of hay if he was not in too much of a hurry. Then the farmers commenced to drain their lands and the roads began to wear out in places and when the wheel of a wagon dropped thru one of the spots where a log or two was missing it generally broke all the eggs in the back end of the wagon and caused the farmer to say things that would not look well in print. Then the logs would not stay put, either. As each season passed by they kept working to the surface of the road and it was necessary to pick them up. That is the condition of affairs out-toward Vesper. The logs are still coming to the surface, and if they would all come up in one year, it would not be such an awful lot of work to get them out, but just a few come up each year and they keep the road rough and have a tendency to spoil any permanent road work that might otherwise be attempted. Sigel is not the only town in the state that is afflicted with worn out corduroy roads, by any means, and it is doubtful if the thing had to be done all over again, if any better method could be devised for building a temporary highway thru a new country where the natural drainage was poor.

DEATH OF MRS. HERSCHLEB.

Young Mother Passes Away After Her Battle With Tuberculosis.

Mrs. Edna Muir Herschleib, wife of Wilbur Herschleib, died at the home of her parents early Friday morning, after a sickness of about seven months from tuberculosis. Mrs. Herschleib was taken sick last fall and after her case was diagnosed as tuberculosis she was taken to the sanitarium at Wales for treatment. Here everything possible was done for her, but she continued to fall until a few weeks ago she was brought home, it being realized that it was impossible to save her life.

Deceased was born at Winona on the 24th of October, 1885, and would have been 27 years of age on her next birthday. She came to this city with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Muir, and grew to womanhood here and graduated from the local high school with the class of 1907. On June 15th, 1909, she was married to Wilbur Herschleib, and is survived by the husband and two boys, one two years old and one eight months. She was also survived by one sister, Mrs. Gilbert Marvin, one brother, Kirk Muir, and her parents. Her death at this time was certainly a most untimely one, and her family have the sympathy of the community in their sad affliction.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon, services being conducted at the home and later at the Episcopal church, of which she was a member. Rev. A. C. Pinedner conducting the services.

Provisions are More Liberal to Owners.
The men who furnish the material for building houses are now getting the benefit of it. The new bill that has passed the legislature changes the security of a material man as regards materials sold to a person for building or repair purposes and which is much more liberal to the real estate owner than the present law.

Under existing statutes if any material man furnishes material to a contractor and the contractor fails to pay for such materials the material man can file a notice of a lien and foreclose for his debts upon the property.

The new law changes this and provides that if a material man is worried about the reliability of a contractor who is buying materials of him for improvements on any property that the material man must, within ten days after furnishing the materials, serve a notice on the owner of the property that he shall hold him responsible for the goods furnished and thus give him a settlement in a suit. The new law reaches between the main contractor and the material man for the materials furnished for the improvement.

If this notice is not served within ten days the material man has no lien and no security against the property unless the notice is served, thus giving the property owners a chance to protect themselves in dealings with an unreliable main contractor.

But Few Guide Boards.

There is a law on the statute books of Wisconsin that is not being enforced very rigidly. It is that relating to the putting up of guide boards on road corners and crossings. In some towns the law has been observed but in many others there has been no attempt made to erect the guides. The law was passed by the 1909 legislature. Persons traveling through unfamiliar country are often forced to drive long distances out of their way or suffer from the putting up of guide boards. A few guide boards would make this unnecessary. Automobile clubs in the state have taken the matter up and will send out notices to town chairmen and other officials whose duty it is to see that the law in this regard is enforced.

Hurt in Auto Accident.

Wm. F. Nehf was brought to this city from Point Saturday night and placed in Riverview hospital where he has since been recovering from some bruises he received in an automobile accident. Mr. Nehf, in company with some other gentlemen, was riding in an auto near City Point when the machine ran into a ditch, quite badly bruised up he had no bones broken and will soon be able to be about again. The automobile the men were riding in was a Ford touring car, which was smashed up somewhat, but after being repaired, was in such condition that the men continued their trip to this city, bringing the injured man with them.

Curtis Store Sold.

Chas. H. Curtis has sold his stock of goods in the Curtis Variety store to E. L. and S. W. Howard, and the new proprietors took charge of the place on Tuesday. Mr. Curtis intends to go west to look up a location to engage in business.

Herman Hill of the town of Seneca, has exchanged his 120 acre farm in the town of Seneca for four houses in Kaukauna, belonging to Henry Mau. Mr. Mau will take possession of the farm in the near future. The exchange was made thru the Ginsburg agency.

James E. Gillespie, the district engineer, who has charge of the state highway construction in the fourth district, arrived in the city the fore part of the week and has opened an office in the court house. His work will extend over the counties of Wood, Lincoln, Marathon, Portage, Waupaca, Washburn, Adams and Juneau. There will also be a surveyor, a draftsman and an inspector stationed here, under Mr. Gillespie. As these men will oversee all the work done in the fourth district they will necessarily have to do considerable traveling to cover the territory properly.

Among the laws passed by the state legislature are two which have a local interest, in that they apply to the sale of liquor, etc., to persons who have been "posted". The law provides that any saloon keeper who shall allow persons to whom they have been forbidden to sell liquor, or any minor, to loaf about their premises, shall be subject to fine and imprisonment. The other law provides that any supervisor, alderman, mayor and county superintendent may renew the prohibition against the sale of liquor to persons known to be habitual drunkards from year to year as they see fit.

Opinion of Our Assemblyman D. D. Conway on the Matter Under Consideration.

The committee that has under consideration the removal of the state fair from Milwaukee, have been in the Cream City the fore part of the week looking over the premises for the purpose of giving an intelligent answer on the subject. The following are the views on the subject expressed by D. D. Conway, assemblyman from Wood County which is taken from the Milwaukee News:

"Personally I do not know and reason why the state fair should be taken away from Milwaukee," said D. D. Conway of Grand Rapids, a member of the committee. "We will know more about it after we have been out to look over the fair grounds."

"Asked if he is not already thoroughly familiar with the conditions at the grounds, he said, 'I have only been there twice, and I know very little about the grounds and buildings. I have come to the city year after year, intending to visit the fair, and after standing on corners watching packed cars go by, I'd decide to remain downtown. Hundreds of people do the same. On both occasions when I did go out it took me two hours to get down town after leaving the grounds. But I do not know that any other city can offer better transportation facilities.'"

Mr. Conway said some exhibitors complain that provision for stock costs an excessively high price here, and that complaints have been registered about delays in transporting stock over the railroads.

This matter of moving the state fair is quite a serious proposition. While there may be some serious drawbacks to the city of Milwaukee, the question naturally arises as to whether any other city in the state could handle it any better. If a city like Milwaukee is taxed to its utmost to handle the crowd, what would any other city do with the same number of people? Any way, notwithstanding the fact that the fair is pretty badly crowded at all times while the fair is in session, but a whole lot of people go there just the same and a goodly number manage to get out to the fair grounds in some way, notwithstanding the fact that the cars are pretty badly crowded at all times while the fair is in session.

The visitors came over on a special train from Stevens Point and were thus enabled to attend the affair and get back home again the same night, which made it possible for a great many more to come than they would have done otherwise.

The evening's entertainment opened with a banquet and this part started in about 6:30 o'clock, and there were in the neighborhood of 175 seated at the tables. There were speeches by the local members and the visitors. At the conclusion of the banquet several new members were initiated into the order, they being Misses Ruth Horton, Lucille Church, Faye Warner and Mary Jones. After the new members were initiated those present indulged in a general visit among themselves and a very pleasant hour was spent. Both the visitors and the local members stated that it was one of the most pleasant evenings ever held by the local lodge.

Indian Materials Wanted.

The State Historical Museum at Madison, Wisconsin, is making an effort to increase its archeological collection and requests the assistance of public spirited citizens who have the opportunity to do so to contribute specimens to these. At this time of the year, in cultivating fields, old Indian stones and other implements are frequently found. These are of general value to the archeologist but when properly labeled and placed in cases in the state collections become of educational value to thousands of visitors.

Articles of dress and personal adornment and implements made and used by the present Wisconsin tribes will be greatly appreciated. All gifts will be appropriately acknowledged to the donors.

Consolidation of Country Schools.

The interest in consolidation is constantly growing. Inquiries frequently come to the Department of Education for literature on the subject, and calls are often made for some one from the department to attend meetings for the purpose of discussing the proposition. During the year at the department a bulletin on the subject dealing especially with such phases as may be of interest to Wisconsin people. This bulletin is for free distribution and may be obtained by writing to the State Superintendent.

In localities where the schools are very small the discussion of this topic is especially timely. There are many small schools located in the older sections of the state where transportation is feasible.

Deceased was 83 years of age and a veteran of the Civil war, and although he lived here for 10 years, was not very well known, owing to the fact that he was incapacitated about five years ago by a stroke of paralysis, since which time he has been confined to the house.

Dr. and Mrs. Ridgman went to Bay City to attend the funeral, which was held on Thursday. George Moulton, the mason, broke one of the bones in his left leg near the ankle on Monday while at work on the D. B. Phillips residence on South Third Street. He was descending from the scaffolding and in stepping down he placed his foot on the edge of a board which turned over and allowed his whole weight to come onto the member. He was taken home and a surgeon reduced the fracture, but it will be a month or six weeks before he will be able to use the foot to any extent.

PROPERTY CAUSES TRAG-

With a Poker and Attempting to End the Lives of Two Others.

Sparta.—Because of family troubles, William Hogue, aged 70, a retired farmer, killed his wife with a poker, three times shot his daughter, Mrs. Guy Wilson, with a revolver, seriously wounded his son-in-law with two shots from the same weapon, and then committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor. He was dead when officers summoned by neighbors arrived on the scene.

CROWDS STORM CARS

ON CINCINNATI TRACKS.Crews Are Compelled to Flee for Their Lives After Being Beaten by Mobs.

Cincinnati, May 13.—One car burned, five deserted and left standing on the streets in the downtown section and the crews of these six cars either beaten or forced to run to cover is the total result of an effort made by the Cincinnati Traction company to operate cars on its lines.

An Avondale line car while passing Hunt street and Broadway was suddenly seen to be ablaze. Several men in a wagon driving alongside the car had thrown a quantity of gasoline over it and then put a match to it.

Two other Avondale cars passed through the center of the city followed by a jeering crowd, but upon reaching Seventh and Sycamore streets some one cut the trolley ropes, while a combined assault was made on the cars by a crowd of strikers or sympathizers and several of the crew were roughly handled.

On Central avenue, in the West End, two John street cars attempted to work their way to the center of the city when a heavy wagon was driven directly in front of them and apparently stalled.

Before the police could move the wagon from the tracks a crowd boarded the cars, rocks and bottles were hurled through them and few of the crew of sixteen men managed to escape bruises or cuts. None, however, reported serious injury.

Another Avondale car was stopped at Court street and Broadway and the crew deserted without a fight.

The traction company announced that it would continue to make attempts to operate the cars, and further trouble is feared.

NAVY PLANS STOLEN

SENSATION CAUSED BY THEFT OF DOCUMENTS AS TO DREAD-NOUGHT.

DETECTIVES ARE AT WORK

No Clue Is Yet Discovered of Thieves
Who Took Papers Relative to Giant Battleship Pennsylvania Two Months Ago.

Washington, May 15.—A sensation was caused in navy circles Tuesday when the disclosure was made that important plans, some of which relate to the new dreadnought Pennsylvania, have been stolen from the department.

It can be said on reliable authority that the thefts began two months ago and that, despite the activity of secret service men, the Burns' detective agency and the police, no clue to the thief has been discovered. The heads of the department are disturbed, not knowing what documents may be next.

According to the information available at this time the loss of the documents began to be noticed in February. Most of the thefts have been comparatively insignificant, relating to the manual of the department and similar documents. When, however, plans for some of the work on the new giant battleship disappeared the situation became so serious that steps had to be taken by the department to search for the perpetrator.

Outside aid was called in and for weeks under the pretense of a change of administration detectives have been slipped into clerical positions in most of the bureaus of the department and persons known to have handled the missing documents have been under the closest surveillance.

Knowledge of the situation came out through an indiscretion by one of the detectives. The department itself refused to say anything on the subject, but it is understood it may lift the lid later.

It is asserted that the missing documents are not of considerable value to those who abstracted them, but if combined with other plans in the department would practically force the naval constructors to change plans of battleships now authorized. It is to protect the secrets of the department and prevent the loss of the complete plans of new battleships that the department is exercising every known precaution to prevent further leaks and thefts.

A plan is expected to make capital out of the situation in the department by the war propagandists representing manufacturers of war materials, but the theory of those acquainted with the conditions is that no connection can be established between the theft of the papers and any government having diplomatic controversies with the United States.

Building of the dreadnought Pennsylvania, part of the details and minor plans of which have been taken, was authorized by the last congress. It has been designed to displace 31,000 tons and will carry an armament of 34 heavy guns, exceeding in gun power the battleships of any other nation.

It is understood here that special surveillance has been established over the bureau of construction and repair, headed by Naval Constructor Watt, and the bureau of ordnance, of which Rear Admiral N. C. Twining is the head. The missing plans are said to have been traced to both of these bureaus, but which one had them last has not been ascertained.

WILSON ASKS DELAY

REQUESTS JOHNSON TO DEFER
ACTION ON ANTI-ALIEN LAW.President Declares Through Bryan
That He Is Ready to Co-operate With California to Correct Evils.

Washington, May 13.—The federal government's final effort to delay alien land owning legislation in California was made Sunday when Secretary Bryan, in the name of President Wilson, telegraphed Governor Johnson notifying him that the Japanese ambassador had earnestly protested against the bill passed by the California assembly and urging that the governor postpone action by withholding his signature.

The statement in part is as follows: "The president directs me to express his appreciation of your courtesy in delaying action on the land bill now before you until its provisions could be communicated to the Japanese government and considered by it."

"His excellency, Baron Chinda, has on behalf of his government, presented an earnest protest against the measure. As you have before you but two alternatives, viz: to approve or to veto, it will avail nothing to recall to your attention the amendment suggested to the legislature and as the president has already laid before you his views upon the subject, it is unnecessary to reiterate them."

"If a postponement comments itself to your judgment the president will be pleased to co-operate in a systematic effort to discover and correct any evils that may exist in connection with land ownership by aliens."

JACK JOHNSON IS CONVICTED

Jury Finds Negro Pugilist Guilty as White Slave on Seven Counts of Indictment.

Chicago, May 15.—"Jack" Johnson, negro pugilist, was found guilty of white slavery charges by a jury in Judge Carpenter's court shortly before midnight Wednesday.

Four ballots were taken. The vote on the third being 10 to 2 for conviction. The fourth was unanimous for conviction. The verdict was that Johnson was guilty on all of the seven counts of the indictment charging violation of the Mann white slave act. A total maximum penalty of thirty-five years' imprisonment and a fine of $10,000 may be imposed should Judge Carpenter so decide.

Motion for a new trial was made immediately upon the jury's verdict. The matter was set for a hearing on May 19 and Johnson was allowed his freedom until that time upon the $50,000 bonds under which he had previously been held. Assembly Refuses to Blight Love's Young Dream.

CAN BE MARRIED IN STATE

Bill to Prevent Runaway Couples
From Coming into Wisconsin
From Other Commonwealths Is Killed.

Madison, May 15.—The assembly has refused to blight love's young dream. It killed a bill aimed to prevent affectionate young couples eloping across the state line from Illinois and Iowa and playing wedding bells in the Wisconsin border towns, and also to make questionable runaway matches of Wisconsin people into border states.

The bill was championed by Assemblyman Rosa.

"It will prevent runaway matches by requiring that couples conform to the laws of their own states instead of getting across the line to evade them," Rosa said.

Don C. Hall opposed the bill, partly because of a clause which penalizes the officiating magistrate up to a fine of $1,000 or a year in jail. Rosa explained it was to check "marrying magistrates."

Pay for Condemned Cattle.
Senator Cunningham's bill to extend the time two years during which the state will pay for cattle reacting to the tubercular test was engrossed in the assembly. The bill fixes a limit for condemned cattle of $70 per head. The law enacted two years ago provided that after July 1, 1913, the state would make no payments for condemned cattle. This bill extends the limit two years.

Following close upon the assembly's action in killing the Stevens bill for an habitual criminal's act, the senate took the same course with the Stevens bill providing for an indeterminate sentence and the paroling of convicts. Both measures were championed by the state board of control. Upon motion of Senator Skogmo, the senate tabled the nomination of Clem P. Host to be state fire marshal.

Echo of Ekern Controversy.
The Ekern-McGovern controversy has again bobbed up in the senate, when that body sent to engrossment the Boshard bill giving to the circuit court power to review any order of removal made by the governor, or to the supreme court in case such officer was appointed with the senate's consent. The vote was 15 to 12.

The assembly engaged the Burke bill appropriating $2,000 out of the hunter's license fee money for the establishment of a state game farm on the state forestry reserve.

Favors License for Plumbers.
Assemblyman Gannon's bill giving the state board of health power to appoint inspectors and license plumbers in cities of the first, second, third and fourth classes was engrossed. The bill does not apply to cities of the fourth class having a population of less than 2,500. This bill has been repeated at previous sessions of the legislature, but went to engrossment with practically no opposition.

The Kneen bill to prevent the duplication of telephone companies in towns, the same as the present law operating in cities, was engrossed. L. L. Johnson's bill extending the first and second choice now applied to primaries, to the general elections was laid on the table. On motion of Assemblyman Roeder, Chinnock's bill to appropriate $5,000 to reprint a portion of the farmers' institute bulletins was killed.

For Direct Election.
Assemblyman Everett's bill providing for the direct election of United States senators was engrossed. The assembly killed the Dietrich bill for the regulation of stocks and bonds. This bill was practically a copy of the Kansas blue sky law. It also killed the Frederick bill providing that a voter must live in the precinct at least 30 days before he can vote.

Assemblyman Walsh of Milwaukee put up a determined fight for his bill to curb the activities of the installment houses. His substitute amendment providing that the goods purchased cannot be taken away if the purchaser has already paid down 50 per cent, was adopted, and the bill went to engrossment.

Assemblyman Holmes succeeded in having the Hansen amendment to the Martin Sunday closing law defeated. This would leave it to the common councils, town and village boards to provide ordinances for Sunday regulation.

The senate passed the Rhea bill providing that county superintendents shall hold examinations at least twice a year in two different places in the county.

Referring to the recent Clark-Bryan get-together luncheon, The Washington (D. C.) Post says, editorially: "The luncheon at the Baltimore convention will not have done justice to a dramatic turn in the heart-breaking race for the nomination unless it gives prominence to the sequel—the event which found Champ Clark and William J. Bryan closing the breach between them. The estrangement between these leaders had its inception in the unforseen workings of a titanic struggle, during which speeches were made by Mr. Bryan which were interpreted by the country as reflecting seriously upon Mr. Clark's political integrity. Mr. Clark had received a majority vote of the convention, and Mr. Bryan's speeches were instrumental in defeating him. He was deeply aggrieved, and it seemed that the breach between the two men would never be closed. The disavowal by Mr. Bryan that he had ever intended to reflect upon the personal or political integrity of Speaker Clark—that he regarded him and now regards him as a 'good, clean, progressive Democrat'—was met with a fine spirit by Speaker Clark, although he was free to say that he still felt a sense of loss that could not be effaced. The restoration of good relations between the two men followed naturally upon the reaching of a mutual understanding. The country loves a good loser, and was shown in the case of President Taft. It will applaud the magnanimity of Champ Clark, and will welcome the beginning of harmonious relations between the speaker and the secretary of state, upon which so much depends in advancing the success of the administration. The Democratic party is the gainer by the effacement of bitterness between the Democrats, Clark and Bryan, and their determination to submerge personal differences not only marks them as truly great leaders, but brings out in most favorable colors the attractive personal qualities of both men.

In its summer school the Massachusetts Agricultural College will give a course for fruit growers which offers a fine opportunity for anyone interested in the study of the subject. Professor Sears has outlined a course which, by means of lectures, demonstrations, and ample field excursions, will take up modern methods of propagating, planting, cultivating, pruning, fertilizing, and spraying of fruit trees. The department of Pomology has ten acres of orchards, including apple, pear, peach, plum, cherry, and quince trees. Of particular interest is the large collection of these fruits on the various dwarf stocks, showing many types of training. The recent revival of interest in dwarf fruit makes these dwarf orchards of especial value to students. There is also a commercial vineyard and a smaller one, in these trellis and the leading methods of training grapes. Several acres are used in growing the various kinds of small fruits such as strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, currants, and gooseberries. There are also extensive nurseries where all of these various types of fruits are grown, in which the student may see them in all stages of development. The department has a good equipment of orchard and nursery tools of all the principal types, the use of which enables students to learn the value of each type. For other orchard operations such as spraying and pruning the most approved makes of pumps, nozzles, pruning saws, knives, and so forth are provided. All of this equipment will be at the disposal of summer school students.

Besides the work in fruit growing, courses will be given in dairying, animal husbandry, poultry breeding, and management, practical gardening, home flower growing, forestry, landscape gardening, elementary and agricultural chemistry, botany, bird life, insects, bookkeeping, home economics, practical arts, home and school gardens, organized play, recreation and pageantry. There will also be a group of courses arranged especially for rural social workers which will take up practical problems in New England agriculture, the church and rural problem, sociological aspects of New England agriculture, rural literature, community cooperation in the reforestation of rural and village schools, and the development of the community.

Bulletins giving full description of the Summer School may be obtained from Professor W. D. Hurd, Amherst, Mass.

A PAYING HALF ACRE CROP.

Wausau Man Sells Product for a Large Sum.

The term of "one-half" is usually applied when referring to a business or an institution of doubtful capacity. But it seems in the Ginseng line the term could hardly be applied in the same sense, for a one-horse Ginseng farmer will make anybody sit up and take notice. Perhaps by far the most valuable load of product of the soil that ever traversed the streets of Wausau, was seen a few days ago, drawn by one horse and the horse did not seem to feel at all abused. The load consisted of eighteen tons of Ginseng, valued at $10,000, and was now being started on its long journey to China. The crop was grown on one-half acre of ground near Wausau. The yield should have been considerably larger but a severe hail storm damaged the crop during one year of its growth. Mr. Koehler and associates have nearly ten acres of Ginseng and goldenseal under cultivation. It is stated by good authority that this is the largest and most successfully conducted garden of its kind in the United States.—Wausau Pilot.

Danes Teach us a Lesson.

(Toledo News Bee)

Just read this quotation over—read it twice, and then think.

Denmark is about one-fourth the size of Wisconsin. Much of it was formerly a "barren waste of sand dunes." Only the eastern part of the country and the neighboring islands were considered fit for agriculture. In addition to its poverty in natural resources, the country was further impoverished by Napoleonic wars in the early part of the nineteenth century. In the second half of the nineteenth century Schleswig-Holstein was taken by the Germans. Practically all of its commerce was gone. The peasant farmers were in a most pitiful condition. Yet, less than a century later, this same Denmark is in proportion to its population, the wealthiest country in Europe.

Denmark is essentially an agricultural country. It has an area of about 10,000,000 acres. More than $90,000,000 worth of butter, eggs and meats are exported by the farmers of Denmark annually. In 1900 the Danes had $208,000,000 in savings banks. Eighty-nine families out of every hundred own their own farms and houses. The small amount of tenancy is due to the fact that land holdings can be easily acquired.

Not the biggest, bluestock type could add a particle to the astonishing facts above stated. Think them over. Poor land, degradation by war, robbery of the best lands by a stronger power, general poverty. And now such general comfort, such immense aggregate wealth, such splendid conditions. And all this attained by what?

War? Conquest? Trading? Manufacturing? None of these. By farming of those bleak sand dunes and the rest of the lands, mostly originally poor. The secret? It is on the surface. "Land holdings are easily obtained." That is the first essential to general prosperity.

Second—Co-operation. The farmers of Denmark are the most thoroughly organized in the world. They buy, sell, sture, market, slaughter their stock and pack their meats co-operatively. All their milk is handled by co-operative creameries and cheese factories.

Land easily obtained for actual work. Land easily obtained for actual workers of land and universal co-operation—think what these things would do for any American state—absolutely any state you may mention—as compared with Denmark.

The above astounding quotation is not from any "Looking Backward" or "Progress and Poverty"—it is from the report of co-operation and Marketing by the Wisconsin State Board of Public Affairs and is based on an official study made in Denmark by a state official.

pleased, for I was not working on the force under orders."

She glanced up at me with a twinkle in her eyes. "Sometimes it's good not to be working under orders," she said. "A person can take any risks that are to be taken, and do just what seems best—after it turns out all wrong. And it's really nice to know that."

Miss Clement looked rather hastily around to see that no other passengers were near us. Then, turning the little notebook playfully about in her hands, she smiled to herself.

"A person never knows what's going to ensue from the smallest kind of happening," she began. "My case came from waiting for a car. You see, that was in the days before I went on the police force regularly, and I was selling candy for a living. Every evening I would take my car for home from one of the corners in the town district, near the office of an afternoon paper. It would be just about time for the last editions to come out, and it was a favorite diversion of mine to watch the circling, yelling newsmen as they hurried in every direction from the building, each in a contest of who could sell the first paper. And watching this way one night I stumbled onto my undiscovered crime."

"Your what?" I interrupted. "The undiscovered crime. Any big city is full of them. Not that they remain undiscovered for long, because they don't. Some little thing will always give the criminal away. It may be even the crooking of a finger at the wrong time. In this case it was the buying of a paper."

"For three nights I had seen him, a short, shifty-eyed, heavy-browed man, who seemed to lurk in the shadows of the building in wait for the whirling of the presses. At the first shuffling of the newsmen he would dart forth, hand out his penny, buy his paper, and then scan the first page. Once in a while he would look aside; not often. It did not impress me so much as the first night, nor even the second. But the third I began to wonder a little about the person, what his motive was in being so anxious to get his paper, and why he should read only the first page, then throw it away."

"I spent a night wondering about that man, and then things began to form themselves in my brain. I determined to watch him. It was none of my business, I knew that I had no right to play detective and to take chances—but I guess when the desire to hunt persons gets into one's head, there isn't anything that will take it out. I like to discover things. I was always a person to be finding out, finding out, and so—well, I started in to learn what the gentleman with the shaggy eyebrows had in mind when he bought his paper every night and then quickly threw it away."

"The next day I reported to the candy company that I was ill, and that I didn't believe I would be down to work for several days. Then, that night, there appeared at the newspaper corner a poor woman, dressed in clothing that was out of date, a bit lame, and not in good of sight. Inquisitively, that same person was my self. I had started on my work of finding out the message of the newspaper. I had hired a girl for a few days to take care of my little kiddie out at the flat; I had kissed the child a long goodbye, in case my passion for detective work should carry me away from her forever, and now I was ready for anything."

"The homegoing crowds began to jam the street cars. Dark had come, then darkness. Fifteen minutes I waited, twenty, and then from the basement I heard the whirling of the presses. A few moments later, there came the shouting newsmen, and with their first appearance my heart gave a leap. Seemingly from nowhere my man appeared, pushed forth his penny, clutched his paper, and was greedily scanning the front page. I watched him as he turned the paper to the pavement and threw down the street. Then I followed."

"It was a long road we traveled, down Fifth Avenue, then turning and crossing the river, past old commission houses and into the tenement district of the city. Sneaking along in the shadows, I saw him enter a dark stairway. I started to follow, then stopped. The building on the upper floor, I had noticed, was occupied on one side by a small manufacturing concern, a sweatshop, probably. Then he must have his room somewhere on the other side. I hurried into the alley next to the building and watched. Soon a light appeared in a window on the fourth floor, to shine dimly a moment, then fade as a curtain was pulled. I strained my eyes at the shadow as the defy. The letters evidently had been read and re-read a thousand times. "I stood at that hole in the wall and peered in. The man before me was changing in every bit of his nature. The shifty, nervous expression had left his eyes now. As he read after the line of the mislaid he held in his hand, his eyes grew steady and cold and glaring. Now and then his lips seemed to part in a snarl. The blood surged to his cheeks, then left them. The hands trembled. The man beneath my gaze was turning animal."

"At last he rose, and with the letters clamped tight in his hands, he began to pace the floor. Once or twice he raised his hands as if to tear the letters into bits; then, with a smooth, exclamation, he threw them far from him, and stood trembling. A moment later he was on the floor hastily, hurriedly lifting an edge of the worn carpet. A picture came forth. I saw that it was the photograph of a man. I knew that it was time for action."

"Out of the room I crept, turning the lock in the door with the softness of velvet. Then down the hall I hurried and into the street. A patrol man was near. I recognized him. "Malloy," I said, "I want you to make an arrest and take the credit for it. Will you do it?"

"He went into the house with me, and then, once in the hall, hid himself in the shadows near the door. I knocked—once, twice, three times. I heard a slight movement within the room—I knew that the man was hiding his cocaine, his letter and the picture. I waited. At last the door opened, and the peering face stared out at me."

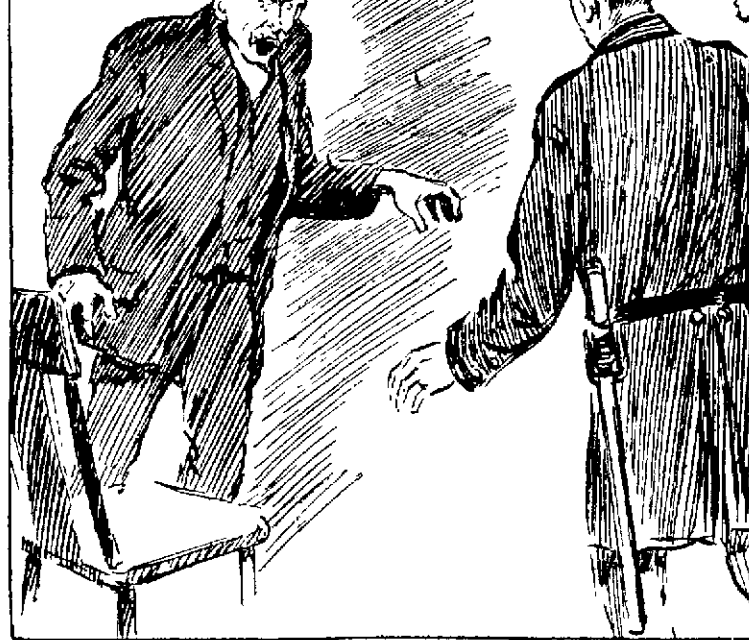

"Well?" he asked. "I walked into the room, almost past his outstretched hand. I sat down near the door. With eyes that were nervous, I saw him reach to turn the key again in the lock as he shut the door. Then there came a feeling of great throbbing as he at last refrained, walked past me with puzzled look and sat down near the window."

"I sat in my little room, looking at the faded, torn wall paper and the miserable furnishings, I dissected the whole thing piece by piece. What was happening? I felt sure of it. He had done something which as yet had not been found out. His conscience was hurting him. The thought of a crime, weighing down upon his brain, was driving him night after night out into the open, to learn if possible if the world had yet learned of his guilt. Yes, I was sure of all that; but to prove it was a different matter. A criminal, forced to the wall, is a hard person to deal with. I had nothing by which a lead of attack might be made. There was nothing that he could be accused of. There was only one thing to do—wait and play sly."

"That night, as the hours grew late, I sneaked into the hall and stealthily approached the door. There, in the shadow, just around the corner from where a dingy hall light threw its feeble rays against the overpowering darkness, I knelt, hour after hour, listening at the keyhole. But no word, no sound, came from within. There was no movement from the man within the room, nothing that would indicate that he was suffering from the thoughts of a crime. I went back to my room and went to sleep."

"The next night it was the same. There must be a new plan. The following day, gauging my time so that I felt sure he would be at the newspaper office, I tried my keys on the door. They all failed. Then, following apparent failure, there entered hope. The door of the room next went open to my touch. I saw that it was vacant. I felt the walls, they were almost nothing. I saw that by judicious use of a sharp knife I could have a hole through the connecting one within a half hour. I set to work."

"The 'L' train had stopped for a moment, and with it stopped Miss Clement's narrative. Then as the motorman shot the lever around on the controller, it began again. "When my man returned that night, he was being watched by two eyes that were tireless. I had stationed myself in my little room, locked and bolted the door, and was at the tiny hole I had made in the wall. I felt sure that it would not be noticed. I was willing anyway, to take the chance. He came into the room, somewhat wildly. His face was set, he seemed nervous. He walked to the small cupboard and took from it a box containing some white powder—a cocaine fiend! Then, almost stealthily, he paced around the room, to look out at last some letters from a desk, and seated himself by the light. I could see that the paper was old and

AGAIN HE RUSHED FORWARD, BUT THIS TIME THERE WAS SOMETHING BESIDE ME TO RECEIVE HIM

"Well?" he asked again. "What is it?" "You don't remember me?" "He seemed to put to a moment. "No," he answered at last. "I lived next door to you." "Where?" He shot the question at me with a queer jerk of his voice. Hastily I rose, walked to the door, looked out, and then returned to my seat. "Would better not mention names or streets," I said in a lowered voice. I felt that my hand was slipping my revolver with extreme tightness. "There are too many that will hear; you know why?"

"The man's face across from mine had turned pale, for a moment, and then a stiffness had come over it. The eyes seemed immovable as they gazed straight at me. "I don't know what you are talking about," came the denial from his lips. "Talk all you want to. Name everything you want to. I know of no reason for quiet."

"Don't you?" I allowed my face to go stern and I leaned forward a bit. "Are you sure of that?" "He shifted in his chair. "Look here," he began, "what is it?" "Not so loud," I interrupted. "Even if you are going to play the fool, I'm not. I'm here to help you. They're found out."

"What?" He was on his feet now, staring at me. "What have—?" "They've found the body. I knew they would. I tried to keep them away from there as long as I could, but they would go in—and when they did, they found it. The neighbors—"

"The face had turned livid now. "What are you talking about?" he asked hoarsely. "Who are you? What are you doing here? What do you mean when you say that you tried to—?"

"I had interrupted him with a gesture. I was on my feet now, too, pointing a finger at him. "You know what I am talking about," I hinted at him. "You know as well as I do that you killed her. You know when the quarrel was, after you had found his letter to her and his picture. You know! You thought that no one saw you, but there was one, and that one was myself!"

"Wait!" I ordered. "I am not here to harass you. I'm here to save you. The police are trailing you. They've gotten a description of you from some one around the newspaper offices, some one who has seen you buying papers every night to see if the news of the killing had come out. You fool! Why didn't you get out of town when you had the chance? Didn't you know that some one would see you man, although aware that his wife was not awake, got out of bed and looked at the baby. It was lying quietly, and no fear was aroused in his mind, but he called his sister-in-law and told her what had happened. As soon as she took the child in her arms she saw that it was dead. The mother was then aroused, and as she rose in bed her husband said that she had a razor in her hand. She had reached out during a dream and taken the razor from a chest near the bed, and with it had cut the child's throat."

Work of Childish Brains. Childish brains work well and quickly, but sometimes the difference between the juvenile and adult viewpoints result in strange conclusions and amusing remarks. The recently published diary of an innocent American child of 60 years ago records sundry answers and expressions quite natural to the little maker but inevitably humorous to her elders. Once, for instance, small Anna was asked: "Where does the sun rise and set?" Now, Anna, like all her classmates, had learned the proper "east and west" reply, but her rejoinder was couched in the terms of her daily observation. "It rises over by General Granger's house and sets behind the Methodist church."

The same child, hearing that a "day of prayer and fasting" had been appointed, naively inquired "if it meant to eat as fast as you can."

"I may not know algebra," said the snake, "but I'm quite an adder!"

SCHOOL BOARD PROCEEDINGS

Lincoln Building, Grand Rapids, Wis., May 12, 1913.

Regular meeting of the Board of Education was called to order by President I. P. Witter at 7:40 P. M.

The following commissioners were present: Hill, Reeves, Searle, Ragatz, Witter, Kellogg, Rowland, Babcock, Paulus, Horton, Johnson, Nash, Hatch, Mellicke, and Natwick. (15) absent: Commissioner Bein.

President I. P. Witter delivered his speech of appreciation.

The minutes of the last regular meeting held on April 14, 1913, were then read, corrected and approved.

The following communication was then read:

State of Wisconsin, Department of Public Instruction, Madison, Wis., April 19, 1913.

Supt. C. W. Schwab, Grand Rapids, Wis.

My dear Sir:—I have this morning a complaint from a citizen of your planning to run away—and I found it stopped her. If they hang me they'll have to hang him, too, that's all. He's just as gully as I am. He stole her away from me, he stole her—"

"He stopped. His lips trembled. His eyes went wilder than ever, then closed. His arms covered his face. He was sobbing, sobbing just like some great child. For a moment he stood wavering, then staggered a few steps—then straightened."

"His eyes caught the motion of the door as I closed it. I had softly opened it and waved a hand outside—the signal. With a rush he came toward me."

"What did you open that door for?" he asked. "You're mistaken."

"I saw you when you started to shut it. You signaled to somebody. Then you're not a friend, are you? You're a detective. You came in here to get everything you could out of me, didn't you? Well, you've done it, but you're not going to—"

"Again he rushed forward, but this time there was something beside me to receive him. It was the hulking form of Tom Malloy, whose great arms were extended and crushed the maniacal man before me as though he was a small boy."

"What's the matter with 'thoob?' Tom asked as we called the wagon. I told him.

"But keep me under your hat," I begged. "I'm only a candy saleslady, you know, Tom, and right now I need my job."

"Sure, and he walked right up to me in the street and confessed, he did," grinned Tom. "I'll search the girl's room and find out a few things about him before he gets away. The family washing was usually done once a month, and in some homes once in three months."

The chests brought over from England served for trunks; shelves were made; pegs, driven into the walls for the hanging of clothes, and corner closets were built in kitchens. The mantel of the fireplace, the walls of the kitchen and the rafters served for the hanging of pots, pans, kettles, guns, kettles, guns, corn, dried apples, snowshoes, clothing and other household furnishings."

Simplicity of Colonial Homes. Candlesticks brought from England were in use and some thrifty families employed pine torches for light. Beds and beddings were among the goods brought by the first settlers. Capt. John Endicott's company of 100 men, who settled in Salem, was provided with fifty beds, fifty mats to lie under, fifty pairs of blankets of Welsh cotton, 100 pairs of sheets, fifty bedsteads with wool to put in them and Scotch tickery. There were no springs in the beds. The typical colonial bedsteads were large, many being of the four post style, with canopy tops draped with heavy fabrics."

Bedroom furnishings were prized in colonial times. Benja Cartwright, who died in 1640, bequeathed "my bed, my bolster and two pillows, with a blanket and a coverlet to my sister." She also directed that a pair of sheets be given to Margaret Jackson and that four pairs of sheets be sold to pay her debts."

Some idea of the general equipment of an early colonial home may be gained from the inventory of the estate of Joseph Howe, who died in Lynn in 1650 and left his entire estate to his wife and his 13-year-old daughter. His address was last and buildings and cattle the inventory showed the following property: "A cart and yoke, an ax, two wedges, a load of hay, one cradle, three pounds of powder, twenty pounds of shot, a box, a chest and other timber, three pairs of sheets, two pillow coverings, a feather bed and bolster, four and one-half yards of cloth, a rug, and blanket, six napkins and tablecloth, a bedstead, a chair, a table and two stools, a hanging candlestick, a copper kettle, a tub, a spit and trying pan, a piece of iron, an iron kettle, a brass pot, a gridiron, trays and dishes, an iron pocket, a chest, some books and a dial case."

Simplified housekeeping was necessarily practiced in early colonial times. In Prehistoric Days. Iford, in Essex, England, is famous in the annals of geological research, discoveries there giving an idea of the dangerous state of the Thames valley at an early date in its history. The elephant, the rhinoceros and the bear roamed wild and the prehistoric traveler who dodged them still ran the risk of encountering the tiger or the lion. The number of teeth discovered at Iford shows the elephant to have been particularly common."

Many settlers made log cabins, but they lacked tools for furniture making. The kitchen was the chief room in these early homes. It served as a place for cooking, eating, sleeping and was often used as a workshop. The fireplace was one of the important furnishings of the kitchen. Stoves were unknown. First fireplaces were of green logs covered with clay, and fresh logs were used for andirons making. Jenks established his iron works in Saugus in 1643 and made kitchen ware of iron. Metals were worked on a spit of green wood or were hung in the fire from green Hickory switches."

Furnishings of Early Kitchens. Early settlers commonly ate their meals in the kitchen, as did New Englanders for several generations. Some settlers brought tables with them from England. Others made tables of boards from packing cases coming in from England."

Food was served on wooden trays. Trenches, or wooden trays, were used even at Harvard college. Crockery and earthenware dishes were common and used by some of the better colonial families. Apparently pottery was used in colonial homes, for the general court enacted laws regulating the digging of pottery clay in 1646. A glass factory was established in Salem in 1639, but glassware was not among the common tableware. Silversmiths came from England and settled in Newbury in early times and made spoons."

The floors of early colonial homes were often covered with sands from the seashore or rushes from the marshes. The sand on the floors was sometimes molded into geometrical designs or elaborate figures for adornment. The kitchen floor in the Colonial home in the Essex Institute in Salem furnishes an excellent present-day example of the early colonial way of sanding floors. Brooms were made of stiff reeds or birch twigs, like the brooms used by some farmers in their stables today. Woven carpets and rugs were rare. Bearskins and the pelts of other animals made warm and pretty rugs."

Clocks and Watches Scarce. There were no pictures on the walls, no bookcases and scarcely any of them, for the bible was almost the only book read by the puritans. There were few writing desks; clocks, too, were rare. When Roger Williams became involved in a discussion with some rivals, it was agreed that each side should have 15 minutes in which to present its case. But before the debate was started it was found that not a man in the entire gathering had a watch, and there wasn't a clock, not even a sundial, in the entire neighborhood. So it was agreed that the presiding officer should guess at the time. Sundials in many New England gardens served to tell the time of day. The watchman cried the hours of the night. Many colonial houses were built facing the south, and housewives knew it was noon when the sun was in the south windows."

Kitchen sinks and bathroom furnishings were among the things of which early settlers never dreamed. The first settlers obtained their water from springs or brooks. Later settlers dug wells. Water was brought into houses in buckets. Being scant in supply, it was sparingly used. The daily bath was not a custom practiced. The family washing was usually done once a month, and in some homes once in three months."

Iford, in Essex, England, is famous in the annals of geological research, discoveries there giving an idea of the dangerous state of the Thames valley at an early date in its history. The elephant, the rhinoceros and the bear roamed wild and the prehistoric traveler who dodged them still ran the risk of encountering the tiger or the lion. The number of teeth discovered at Iford shows the elephant to have been particularly common."

Many settlers made log cabins, but they lacked tools for furniture making. The kitchen was the chief room in these early homes. It served as a place for cooking, eating, sleeping and was often used as a workshop. The fireplace was one of the important furnishings of the kitchen. Stoves were unknown. First fireplaces were of green logs covered with clay, and fresh logs were used for andirons making. Jenks established his iron works in Saugus in 1643 and made kitchen ware of iron. Metals were worked on a spit of green wood or were hung in the fire from green Hickory switches."

Furnishings of Early Kitchens. Early settlers commonly ate their meals in the kitchen, as did New Englanders for several generations. Some settlers brought tables with them from England. Others made tables of boards from packing cases coming in from England."

Food was served on wooden trays. Trenches, or wooden trays, were used even at Harvard college. Crockery and earthenware dishes were common and used by some of the better colonial families. Apparently pottery was used in colonial homes, for the general court enacted laws regulating the digging of pottery clay in 1646. A glass factory was established in Salem in 1639, but glassware was not among the common tableware. Silversmiths came from England and settled in Newbury in early times and made spoons."

The floors of early colonial homes were often covered with sands from the seashore or rushes from the marshes. The sand on the floors was sometimes molded into geometrical designs or elaborate figures for adornment. The kitchen floor in the Colonial home in the Essex Institute in Salem furnishes an excellent present-day example of the early colonial way of sanding floors. Brooms were made of stiff reeds or birch twigs, like the brooms used by some farmers in their stables today. Woven carpets and rugs were rare. Bearskins and the pelts of other animals made warm and pretty rugs."

Clocks and Watches Scarce. There were no pictures on the walls, no bookcases and scarcely any of them, for the bible was almost the only book read by the puritans. There were few writing desks; clocks, too, were rare. When Roger Williams became involved in a discussion with some rivals, it was agreed that each side should have 15 minutes in which to present its case. But before the debate was started it was found that not a man in the entire gathering had a watch, and there wasn't a clock, not even a sundial, in the entire neighborhood. So it was agreed that the presiding officer should guess at the time. Sundials in many New England gardens served to tell the time of day. The watchman cried the hours of the night. Many colonial houses were built facing the south, and housewives knew it was noon when the sun was in the south windows."

Kitchen sinks and bathroom furnishings were among the things of which early settlers never dreamed. The first settlers obtained their water from springs or brooks. Later settlers dug wells. Water was brought into houses in buckets. Being scant in supply, it was sparingly used. The daily bath was not a custom practiced. The family washing was usually done once a month, and in some homes once in three months."

Simplicity of Colonial Homes. Candlesticks brought from England were in use and some thrifty families employed pine torches for light. She also directed that a pair of sheets be given to Margaret Jackson and that four pairs of sheets be sold to pay her debts."

Some idea of the general equipment of an early colonial home may be gained from the inventory of the estate of Joseph Howe, who died in Lynn in 1650 and left his entire estate to his wife and his 13-year-old daughter. No, Nellie, there is no need of you telling us your troubles. You should never have insisted on your fellow taking you to an ice cream parlor. The best thing for you to do is to sit still, in the boat and calm yourself. You know as well as we do that with an appetite like yours you could put a bank cashier on the hummer, not saying anything about a young man with a salary that a microbe couldn't live on. Get over the idea that you should be treated as a prodigal son every time he comes to see you. When you feel the desire coming on, eat a wafer and then go to the pump. My dear Sir:—I have this morning a complaint from a citizen of your city, who prefers not to have the name used, that a number of children in the first grade in the Lowell school are required to go to school in a damp and unsanitary basement. If the complaint is correct, I hope you will assure me that it is being properly taken care of so that it will not be necessary to use this room next year.

Yours cordially,
(Signed) C. F. Cary,
State Superintendent.

CHAPTER XV.

A Confession.

Of late Bernice had not been sleeping well and the fear that this would result upon her locks had spurred her to the unwelcome exertion of walking. The route she had chosen was one of those thoroughfares which radiate from Market Street, and though not very slums, are far removed from the calm, wide gentility of the city's more dignified highways. With all her nervousness, she had never shaken off the tastes and instincts of the class she had come from.

Walking powerfully forward, she crossed Pottery Street, and approached the entrance of that home of vaudeville, the Granada Theater. There had been a recent change of bill, and as she drew near she looked over the posters standing by the entrance on which the program for the coming week was printed in large letters. Near to the bottom of the list, she was caught by a name and she paused and stood reading the words:

"JAMES DEWAY BUFORD
The Witty, Brilliant and Incomparable Monologist
In His Unrivaled Monologue Entitled
"KLONDIKE MEMORIES."

She remembered at once that this was the actor Dominick had spoken of as having been snowed in with them at Antelope. Dominick had evidently not expected he would come to San Francisco. He had said the man had been going to act in Sacramento.

As she walked down the street she saw that she was approaching the car line which passed close to her old home. A clock in a window showed her it was nearly five. Hannah would have been home for some time, and Hazel might be expected within an hour. Without more thought she hailed an up-town car.

She found them both at home, Hazel having been allowed to leave her work an hour earlier than usual. Sitting in a small room in the back of the house, they were surrounded by the outward signs of dressmaking. Yards of material lay over the chairs, and on a small wooden table, which fitted close to her body and upon which portions of the material lay neatly smoothed out, Hannah was cutting with a large pair of shears. If Bernice wanted to surprise her sisters, she certainly now had the satisfaction of realizing her hopes. For a moment after she told her news they stared at her, too amazed to speak, even Hannah, who had scented difficulties, being completely unprepared after the way of human nature—for the particular difficulty that had cropped up. It was Hazel who first spoke.

"Buy you off to leave Dominick? Give you money to go away from him, do you mean?"

"That's what I said," returned her sister with dry grimaces. "She's made me two offers to leave my husband, wants me to get out and, after I've gone for a year, ask him to bring suit for desertion."

"My Lord!" murmured Hannah in a hushed voice of horror.

"How much did she offer you?" said Hazel.

"There was a crucial question. Bernice knew his importance and set up, pushing back her disarranged hat.

"One hundred thousand dollars," she said calmly.

"A hundred thousand dollars!" gasped Hazel. "Why—why—Bernie!"

She stopped, almost trembling in the excitement of her stunned incredulity.

"A hundred thousand dollars!" Hannah echoed, each word pronounced with a slow, agonized sob. "Oh, it can't be that much!"

"It's that, much now," said Bernice, her calmness accentuated to the point of nonchalance. "And if I want I can make them double it, raise it to a quarter of a million. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars isn't so much when you've got millions in trunks. What's that to the Ryans?"

She rose abruptly from her seat, pushing it back and feeling that she had better go before she said too much.

As she rose, Hazel rose too, her face full of a suspicious concern.

"It's not another woman, is it, Bernie?" she a little whispered.

Bernie had told so many lies that she did not: neither about a few more.

It was Bernice, but a rejuvenated and prosperous Buford, the reflection of his good fortune shining from his beaming face and fashionable figure. The red rasped look had left his face.

He stepped to buy the tickets one midway on his way to lunch. He made up his mind to buy three, then Bernice could either take her two sisters, or Hazel and Josh, whose craving for the theater was an unassuageable pain. He was turning from the ticket office window when a snoring voice at his elbow greeted him:

"Mr. Ryan," it boomed out, "do I see you at last?"

MYSTERY IN CONTINUAL CROW

Rooster's Seemingly Eternal Optimism Something That Had Got on the Nerves of Blinks.

Blinks stared at a dilapidated chandelier with a greatly puzzled expression.

"It fair beats me," he said.

"What does?" his friend asked, curiously.

"That there rooster. He's a bloomin' mystery, blow me if 'e ain't," he intimated.

"How's that?"

"Well, the boggar's always cawing. You wouldn't think it, perhaps, but that blighter there gets up at three every morning lookin' for worms while 'e ain't there. Then 'e crows as if 'e'd got a cropful. At 'ut later in the day 'e's minglin' about to feed 'im along with the rest, but a whoppin' big black game-cock drives 'im away breakfastin' every time. Then, though it seems 'ard to believe, 'e begins crows some more! After breakfast 'e goes out to mash some of the stumps 'ere, but then another rooster comes along and chews what's left of his moth-eaten comb, and generally makes a gory mess of 'im. Then 'e crows again."

"Well, what about it?"

"What about it? 'Im binged if I can see what the josses' got to crow about! Can you?"—London Tit-Bits.

According to fiction old Bluebeard was the original "lady-killer."

"Nearly four," said the actor. He looked down at his shoe for a moment as if considering, and repeated without looking up, "It will be four, next September. Trouble drove me to the far distant lands and hard luck drove me on the stage. I'll never have anything to do with it till then; I hadn't time to come about me. There'd even been a time when I had a strong prejudice against the theater and never went to one. But a man must live and—"

He stopped, his attention arrested by a hand laid softly on his sleeve. A youth of Hebraic countenance had issued from a door behind him, and, touching his arm with a "startling, unclean finger, began to speak in a low tone.

"Duty calls," said Buford. "I am sorry, but they want me inside. I hope later to be able to place a box at your disposal. Madame, you say, is very desirous of seeing me. Well, I'll see to it that she does so under the most favorable conditions."

He bowed impressively as though saluting Bernice in person, and then, with a last dignified farewell to Dominick, turned toward the door which opened at his approach.

CHAPTER XVI.

Rose's Point of View.

The following Sunday, at ten o'clock in the morning, Dominick noiselessly descended the stairs of the flat and let himself out into the street. He would spend the morning walking, anywhere where there was quiet and a view. He would take his lunch at a little joint—country hotel, city chop-house—he happened to pass, and in the afternoon he would walk again.

He ascended the hill by one of the streets on its southern slope, violently steep, the upward leaps of its sidewalk here and there bridged by flights of steps. Every little house was disgorging its inmates, garbed in the light Sunday attire of the Californian on pleasure bent.

Dominick went up the hill in the clear, golden sunlight, and in his revolve he pushed Bernice from his mind, and let Rose come in her place. His thoughts, always held from her, sprang at her, enraptured her, seemed to draw her toward him as once his arms had done.

Standing on the summit of the hill, where the wall of the quarry drops down to the water front and the wharves, he relinquished himself to his dream of her.

As if called, he turned sharply and saw Rose standing a few yards away from him, looking at him with an expression of startled indecision.

"I wasn't sure it was you," she said, "and then when I saw it was, I was going to steal away before you saw me. But you turned suddenly as if you heard me."

"I felt you there," he answered. "I walked up here this morning, to have a think. I don't know where the link was going to take me when you came round that corner and stopped it. What brought you here?"

"Nothing in particular. It was such a fine morning I thought I'd just ramble about, and I came this way without thinking. My feet brought me without my knowledge."

"Sit down and talk to me," he said quietly. "No one can hear you. I'd like being all alone in the world up here on the hilltop. We can sit on this stone."

There was a broken boulder behind the most exacting father could wish. His mood was unusually black when he entered the house. The servant, who came forward to help him off with his coat, knew if the moment he saw the heavy, scowling face. The piece of intelligence the man had to convey—that Mr. Gene Cannon had arrived half an hour earlier from San Luis Obispo—was not calculated to abate the Bonanza King's irritation.

Gene, however, was not at all abashed by any lack of cordiality. At the best of times, he was not a sensitive person; and as this had been his portion since his early manhood, he was now used to it. Moreover, to-night he was in high spirits. In his year of exile he had learned to love the outdoor life for which he was fitted, and had conceived a passionate desire to own the splendid tract of land for which he felt the love and pride of a proprietor.

Always a loquacious person, a stream of talk flowed from him, to which the old man offered no interruption, and in which even Rose found it difficult to insert an occasional, arresting question. Gene had a number of new plans.

The old man listened without speaking, his chin on his collar, his eyes fixed in a wide, dull stare on his happy boy. At intervals—Gene almost clapped his hand on his forehead, and then brought up on the schooner bearing away on its long, tattered and creaking in the breeze, that down there in the open, blew fresh and strong from the great Pacific.

"It's a schooner," she said absently. "Where do you suppose it's going?"

"I don't know. Somewhere a long way off, I hope. My devils are sailing away on it."

They stood side by side, gazing down at it till she moved away with a sudden "Good-by."

"Good-by," he answered, and stretched out his hand.

Bernie had been turning over in her mind the advantages of accepting the money, but had been letting herself dwell upon the delights of possible possession when at the Sunday dinner that afternoon Josh McCray, threw her back into the state of incensed rejection with which she had met the first offer. With his face wreathed in joyous grins, he had apprised her of the fact that only an hour earlier, while walking on Telegraph Hill, he had seen Dominick there talking with Miss Cannon.

She was quiet for the rest of the afternoon, but was not till she had reached her own home, silent in its unbroken desertion, that she had an opportunity to turn the full vigor of her mind on what she had heard.

She put from her mind all intention of ever taking the money. She wanted it desperately, terribly.

She knew that the interview for which Bill Cannon had asked was for a last, final conversation. He was a man of his word, and it was a moment of torture to her when she wondered what he would do, and her mind hovered in distracted temptation over the certain two hundred thousand dollars and the possible quarter of a million.

She was in this state of feverish distraction when she went to Bill Cannon's office.

Nothing could be more disarmingly friendly than the old man's greeting. "What I asked you to come here to-day was to talk about this matter, to talk further, to thresh it out some. I've seen Mrs. Ryan since our last meeting. She doubts her offer to you. She'll give you two hundred thousand dollars to leave her son."

"Well, I won't," said Bernice, drawing herself to the edge of the chair. "She can keep her two hundred thousand dollars."

"Don't be in such a hurry; I've not finished yet. This is just a suggestion, you and me, he went on slowly, his voice lowered, dropped to the key of confidence. "I'll give you another hundred thousand. I'll put it with Mrs. Ryan's pile, and it'll run your fortune up well past a quarter of a million."

"You think that I don't know your offer?" he asked. "Well, old man, I do. You want to get my husband for your own daughter, Rose Cannon."

It was Cannon's turn to be speechless. He had not for years received so unexpected and violent a blow. He sat in the same attitude, not moving or uttering a sound, and looking at Bernice with a pair of eyes that each second grew colder and more steely.

"Come," he said with sudden authority. "I can't waste my time this way. Are you going to take the money or not?"

His manner, as if by magic, had changed. Every suggestion of deference or consideration had gone from it.

"Will you take the money?"

"No!" she said loudly. "Don't ask me that again!"

"All right," he answered quietly. "That ends our business. Do you know your way out, or shall I ring for Granger to see you to the door?"

It was late, almost dark, that evening when Cannon left his office. As he walked down Montgomery Street to the car, he pondered on Bernice, wondering and with a sort of begrudging, astonished admiration of a courage that he could not but admire.

How she had found out about Rose he could not imagine, only it was very embarrassing that she should have done so. It was the last, and most deplorable fact in the whole disagreeable business.

It was the first of May. By the morning's mail he had received a letter from Gene announcing, with playful blitheness which masked all the young man's allusions to the transfer of the Santa Trinidad ranch, that the year of probation was up and he would shortly arrive in San Francisco to claim his own.

Gene's father had read this missive in grim-visaged silence. The sense of self-approval that he might have experienced was not his; he only felt that he had been "done." Two months before, thinking that the ranch was slipping too easily from his grasp, he had been making too little effort to retain his own, he had hired a detective to go to San Luis Obispo and watch the career of Gene for signs of his old waywardness. On the thirtieth of April the man had reported that Gene's course had been marked by an abstinence as genuine and complete

as the most exacting father could wish. His mood was unusually black when he entered the house. The servant, who came forward to help him off with his coat, knew if the moment he saw the heavy, scowling face. The piece of intelligence the man had to convey—that Mr. Gene Cannon had arrived half an hour earlier from San Luis Obispo—was not calculated to abate the Bonanza King's irritation.

"Will you take the money?"

"No!" she said loudly. "Don't ask me that again!"

"All right," he answered quietly. "That ends our business. Do you know your way out, or shall I ring for Granger to see you to the door?"

It was late, almost dark, that evening when Cannon left his office. As he walked down Montgomery Street to the car, he pondered on Bernice, wondering and with a sort of begrudging, astonished admiration of a courage that he could not but admire.

How she had found out about Rose he could not imagine, only it was very embarrassing that she should have done so. It was the last, and most deplorable fact in the whole disagreeable business.

It was the first of May. By the morning's mail he had received a letter from Gene announcing, with playful blitheness which masked all the young man's allusions to the transfer of the Santa Trinidad ranch, that the year of probation was up and he would shortly arrive in San Francisco to claim his own.

Gene's father had read this missive in grim-visaged silence. The sense of self-approval that he might have experienced was not his; he only felt that he had been "done." Two months before, thinking that the ranch was slipping too easily from his grasp, he had been making too little effort to retain his own, he had hired a detective to go to San Luis Obispo and watch the career of Gene for signs of his old waywardness. On the thirtieth of April the man had reported that Gene's course had been marked by an abstinence as genuine and complete

as the most exacting father could wish. His mood was unusually black when he entered the house. The servant, who came forward to help him off with his coat, knew if the moment he saw the heavy, scowling face. The piece of intelligence the man had to convey—that Mr. Gene Cannon had arrived half an hour earlier from San Luis Obispo—was not calculated to abate the Bonanza King's irritation.

Gene, however, was not at all abashed by any lack of cordiality. At the best of times, he was not a sensitive person; and as this had been his portion since his early manhood, he was now used to it. Moreover, to-night he was in high spirits. In his year of exile he had learned to love the outdoor life for which he was fitted, and had conceived a passionate desire to own the splendid tract of land for which he felt the love and pride of a proprietor.

Always a loquacious person, a stream of talk flowed from him, to which the old man offered no interruption, and in which even Rose found it difficult to insert an occasional, arresting question. Gene had a number of new plans.

The old man listened without speaking, his chin on his collar, his eyes fixed in a wide, dull stare on his happy boy. At intervals—Gene almost clapped

CHAPTER XVII.

Out of the Fullness of the Heart.

That night it was Bernie's turn to be wakened. In the silence of the sleeping house and the warm darkness of her curtained room, she lay, tossing on her bed, hearing the clock as it struck the hours. When the first streak of gray painted a pale line between the window curtains she rose and took a sleeping powder and soon after fell into a heavy slumber.

This held her in the dead, motionless unconsciousness that a "drug brings, through the long morning hours. Dominick's noiseless departure hardly disturbed the hushed quiet of the little flat. The Chinaman, trained by his exacting mistress to make no sound while she slept, went about his work with a stealthy step and cautious touch, even in the kitchen, shut off by space and muffled doors, continuing to experience with the wrath of Mrs. Ryan when she had been roused from slumbers by a banged door or a dropped pan.

It was nearly lunch-time when she awoke, slowly emerging from the black, unbroken deadness of her sleep to a momentarily numbing sense of depression. She rose, her body seeming to participate in the oppressive discomfort of her mind, and the old man had looked forward to one of their slow, enjoyable meals together, with a black coffee, as was their wont.

When dinner was over, and she rose from her seat, he asked her to play on the piano in the sitting-room near by.

Neither of the men spoke for a space while the music crept in softly from the sitting room. The old man gazed for a while maliciously at his son.

"Well, you've got it!" said the father at last, in a loud, vigorous tone. "You've got it, I haven't doubt."

"Well, I guess I have," said Gene, his manner tempered by an air of modesty, "and I guess I earned it fair. I stuck to the bargain and there were times when I can tell you it was a struggle. I never once slipped up. If you don't believe my word, I can bring you men from down there that know me well, and they'll testify that I speak the truth."

"It was Rose who really put me up to it," he went on. "She'd say to me, 'I could do it, I only had to try; any one could do anything they really meant their minds up to. If you said you couldn't do a thing, why, then you couldn't, but if you said you could, you got your mind into that attitude, and it wasn't hard any more. And she was right. When I got my mind right to looking at it that way, it came quite easily. Rose's been an angel to me."

"Then, what the hell," said the old man, "do you go on talking about yourself and your damned concerns, bothering the life out of her when she's got troubles of her own?"

"Troubles of her own?" What troubles has she got?"

"She's got a cold," said Cannon.

He spoke sharply and looked at Gene with a sidelong eye full of obdurate malice. The young man gazed back at him, confused for a moment half inclined to laugh, thinking his father in a sudden unaccounted playfulness, was joking with him.

"Well, it's only a cold," he stammered, "it's nothing to tear up the ground about. I thought it was something serious, that Rose was unhappy about something. But a cold!"

After all, it was a good thing the boy did not know; he was of the kind who could not be trusted with any information of importance. He did not

WHAT MAKES A NATION.

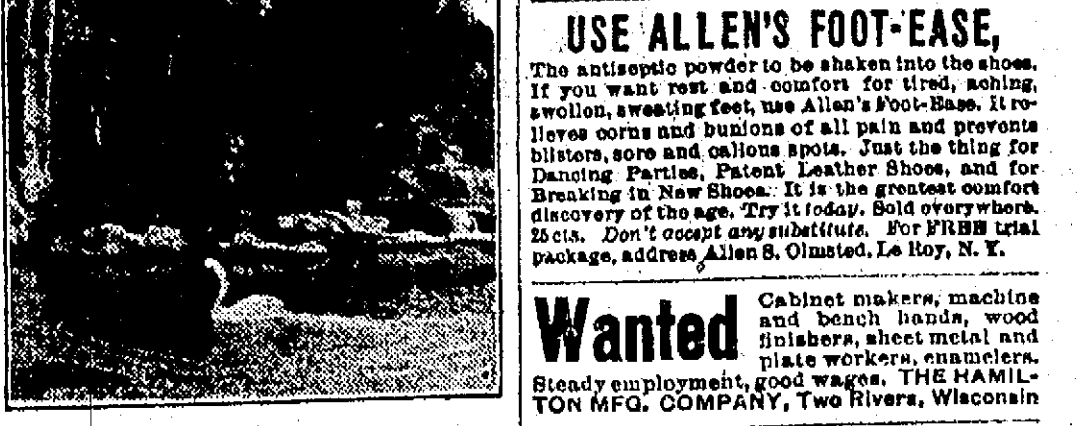

I believe there is no permanent greatness to a nation except it be based upon morality. I do not care for military greatness or military renown. I care for the condition of the people among whom I live. Crowns, coronets, mitres, military display, the pomp of war, wide colonies and a huge empire are, in my view, all trifles, light as air, and not worth considering, unless with them you can have a fair share of comfort, contentment and happiness among the great body of the people. Palaces, baronial castles, great halls, stately mansions do not make a nation. The nation in every country dwells in the cottage; and unless the light of your constitution can shine there, unless the beauty of your legislation and the excellence of your statecraft are so impressed upon the people, rely upon it, have yet to learn the duties of government.—John Bright.

A liking for cactus fruit may be acquired, but the taste for olive oil is not likely to rival the taste for cactus fruit in popular favor. It resembles cracked walnut shells moistened with water, mixed with sawdust and cork and sprinkled with brown sugar, a little lemon juice and a dash of quinine. Any one who tastes it once is satisfied to let the Indians rather than the

FLOWERS OF THE RIVIERA

Blooms Appear Everywhere: Over Each Doorway, on Every Balcony, Covering Up Old Ruins.

Rome.—Not only does the Riviera display an endless variety of rich foliage, but an enormous profusion of flowers, says William Scott in Riviera. Flowers are everywhere; in formal beds, in obedient lines of ranged hues, in careless clusters, in masses, wreaths, and sprays. They appear in every possible corner, over each door, on every balcony, covering the nakedness of ruins and garlanding the beauty of architectural lines with a riotous joy of color and bloom. So the dear old-fashioned flowers of home, the stocks, gilly-flowers, geraniums, violets, carnations (and such carnations—fields of them!) We add the iris, the cleander, the mimosa, the lilac, the gigantic aloe (out of whose leaves rope is now made), the yellow cassia, and many, many more.

But the undisputed queen of flowers, the rose, beloved alike of gods and men, is everywhere pre-eminent.

Among the ancient Greeks, we are told, the rose was also the emblem of silence and beauty. And what an eloquent silence filled with the odors of sweet thoughts, too sweet for words; the pure white memories of love's kisses in the morning, the warm golden captures of hot noons in southern sunshine, the blood red hours of passion in the pomegranate shade, that can never be renewed. Of all these, by its thousand varying shades and colors, the Queen Rose reminds us, and of the beauty that has smiled upon our path. We have the tiny rosebud darling nestling in a mother's arms; the pure child loveliness in its robes of snowy white; the pale blush rose of a young girl's cheek at the earliest thought of love; the shyly opening petals as the sun's first kisses move them; the coy yet glad and golden yielding of passion's warm embraces; the red, reckless rapture of its full fruition; the stately beauty of fair form and perfect outline; and not least, for some of us—the faded rose leaves cherished from a past that is ever present, that for us can never die.

In the festivals of pagan Rome the rose had an honored place. Chambers, couches and paths were thickly strewn with rose leaves, and rose garlands crowned the statues of the gods. The Emperor Nero, of whom so many harsh judgments have been recorded, had at least one good and gentle trait—he loved roses. It is said that he spent enormous sums on their cultivation.

The flower markets of the Riviera are never to be forgotten sights. We must include not merely those where foreigners go to buy a few handbells, or armfuls, for their rooms, but the public wholesale markets where the chill winter dawns wait the visitors who are yet asleep, and fair blossoms still unopened, and pack them off by railroads to Germany, Austria, or Russia. The making of baskets for this business of exportation is a flourishing industry in itself, and trains are often delayed on account of the large number of packages to be loaded.

MUST LIVE IN THE STATE

Gotham Passes Ordinance Aimed at City Employees Living in Jersey and Connecticut.

New York.—Several hundred persons on New York's pay roll who live in New Jersey and Connecticut are alarmed with a fear that they will be ordered to move or lose their jobs. An ordinance requiring that all persons employed by the city of New York must live in New York state was passed by the board of aldermen. It was predicted that Mayor Gaynor would veto it, but it had the necessary two-thirds vote which would pass it over his veto. Many high-salaried employees would be affected, but the majority would be school teachers and stenographers.

GRAPE-NUTS

Our own troubles always seem more severe than any others. But when a man is unable to eat even a light breakfast, for years, without severe distress, he has trouble enough. It is small wonder he likes to tell of food which cleared away the troubles. "I'm glad of the opportunity to tell of the good Grape-Nuts has done for me," writes a N. H. man. "For many years I was unable to eat even a light breakfast without great suffering."

"After eating I would suddenly be seized with an attack of colic or vomiting. This would be followed by headache and misery that would sometimes last a week or more. I was so weak I could hardly sit up or walk. I usually began to eat Grape-Nuts. I have been free from the old troubles. I can eat Grape-Nuts one or more times a day, taking it at the beginning of the meal. Now I can eat almost anything I want without trouble."

"When I began to use Grape-Nuts I was way under my usual weight, now I weigh 30 pounds more than I ever did. I am glad of the opportunity to tell of the good Grape-Nuts has done for me," writes a N. H. man. "For many years I was unable to eat even a light breakfast without great suffering."

Referring to the recent Clark-Bryan get-together luncheon, The Washington (D. C.) Post says, editorially: The historian of the Baltimore convention will not have done justice to a dramatic turn in the heart-breaking race for the nomination unless he gives prominence to the sequel—the event which found Champ Clark and William J. Bryan closing the breach between them. The estrangement between these leaders had its inception in the unforeseen workings of a titanic struggle, during which speeches were made by Mr. Bryan which were interpreted by the country as reflecting seriously upon Mr. Clark's political integrity. Mr. Clark had received a majority vote of the convention, and Mr. Bryan's speeches were instrumental in defeating him. He was deeply aggrieved, and it seemed that the breach between the two men would never be closed. The disavowal by Mr. Bryan that he had ever intended to reflect upon the personal or political integrity of Speaker Clark—that he regarded him and now regards him as a "good, clean, Progressive Democrat"—was met with a fine spirit by Speaker Clark, although he was free to say that he still felt a sense of loss that could not be effaced. The restoration of good relations between the two men followed naturally upon the reaching of a mutual understanding. The country loves a good loser, as was shown in the case of President Taft. It will applaud the magnanimity of Champ Clark, and will welcome the beginning of harmonious relations between the speaker and the secretary of state, upon which so much depends in advancing the success of the administration. The Democratic party is the gainer by the effacement of bitterness between Messrs. Clark and Bryan, and their determination to submerge personal differences not only marks them as truly great leaders, but brings out in most favorable colors the attractive personal qualities of both men.

Opportunity for Fruit Growers at Summer School.

In its summer school the Massachusetts Agricultural College will give a course for fruit growers which offers a fine opportunity for anyone interested in the study of the subject. Professor Sears has outlined a course which by means of lectures, demonstrations, and ample field exercises, will take up modern methods of propagating, planting, cultivating, pruning, fertilizing, and spraying of fruit trees. The Department of Pomology has ten acres of orchards, including apple, peach, plum, cherry, currant, and gooseberry. Of particular interest is the large collection of these fruits on the various dwarf stocks, showing many types of training. The recent revival of interest in dwarf fruits makes these dwarf orchards of especial value to students. There is also a commercial vineyard and a smaller one, in these trellis and the leading methods of training grapes. Several acres are used in growing the various kinds of small fruits such as strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, currants, and gooseberries. There are also extensive nurseries where all of these various types of fruits are grown, in which the student may see them in all stages of development. The department has a good equipment of orchard and nursery tools of all the principal types, the use of which enables students to learn the value of each type. For other orchard operations such as spraying and pruning the most approved methods of pumps, ladders, pruning saws, knives, and so forth are provided. All of this equipment will be at the disposal of summer school students. Besides the work in fruit growing, courses will be given in dairying, animal husbandry, poultry breeding, and management, practical gardening, home flower growing, forestry, landscape gardening, elementary and agricultural chemistry, botany, bird life, insects, beekeeping, handicrafts and practical arts, home economics, rural school problems, home and school gardens, organized play, recreation and pageantry. There will also be a group of courses arranged especially for rural social workers which will take up practical problems in New England agriculture, the church and rural problem, sociological aspects of New England agriculture, rural literature, community cooperation in the redefining of rural and village schools, and the development of the community. Bulletin giving full description of the Summer School may be obtained from Professor W. D. Hurd, Amherst, Mass.

A PAYING HALF ACRE CROP.

Wausau Man Sells Product for a Large Sum.

The term of "one-half" is usually applied when referring to a business or an institution of doubtful capacity. But it seems in the ginseng line the term could hardly be applied in the same sense, for a one-horse ginseng farmer will make anything sit up and take notice. Perhaps by far the most valuable load of product of the soil that ever traversed the streets of Wausau, was seen a few days ago, drawn by one horse and the horse did not seem to feel at all abused. The load consisted of eighteen inconspicuous barrels and no one would have surmised its value had it not been that J. H. Koehler was seen watching it with eagle eyes. Upon inquiry it was found that the barrels contained 1343 1/2 pounds of ginseng, which had been sold for $3,081, and was now being started on its long journey to China. The crop was grown on one-half acre of ground near Wausau. The yield should have been considerably larger but a severe hail storm damaged the crop during one year of its growth. Mr. Koehler and associates have nearly ten acres of ginseng and goldenseal under cultivation. It is stated by good authority that this is the largest and most successfully conducted garden of its kind in the United States.—Wausau Pilot.

Just read this quotation over—read it twice, and then think
"Denmark is about one-fourth the size of Wisconsin. Much of it was formerly a bleak waste of sand dunes. Only the eastern part of the country and the neighboring islands were considered fit for agriculture. In addition to its poverty in natural resources, the country was further impoverished by Napoleonic wars in the early part of the nineteenth century. In the second half of the nineteenth century Schleswig-Holstein was taken by the Germans. Practically all of its commerce was gone. The peasant farmers were in a most pitiful condition. Yet today, less than a century later, this same Denmark is, in proportion to its population, the wealthiest country in Europe."

"Denmark is essentially an agricultural country. It has an area of about 10,000,000 acres. More than $90,000,000 worth of butter, eggs and meats are exported by the farmers of Denmark annually. In 1906 the Danes had $208,000,000 in savings banks. Eighty-nine families out of every hundred own their own farms and homes. The small amount of tenancy is due to the fact that land holdings can be easily acquired."

Not the biggest, blackest type could add a particle to the astonishing facts above stated. Think them over. Poor land. Desolation by war. Robbery of the best lands by a stronger power. General poverty. And now such general comfort; such immense aggregate wealth; such splendid conditions. And all this attained by what?

War? Conquest? Trading? Manufacturing? None of these. By farming of those bleak sand dunes and the rest of the lands, mostly originally poor. The secret? It is on the surface. "Land holdings are easily obtained." That is the first essential to general prosperity.

Second—Co-operation. The farmers of Denmark are the most thoroughly organized in the world. They buy, sell, sture, market, slaughter their stock and pack their meats co-operatively. All their milk is handled by co-operative creameries and cheese factories.

Land easily obtained for actual work. Land easily obtained for actual workers of land and universal co-operation—think what these things would do for any American state—absolutely any state you may mention—as compared with Denmark.

The above astounding quotation is not from any "Looking Backward" or "Progress and Poverty"—it is from the report of co-operation and Marketing by the Wisconsin State Board of Public Affairs and is based on an official study made in Denmark by a state official.

Referring to the recent Clark-Bryan get-together luncheon, The Washington (D. C.) Post says: "The historic of the Baltimore convention will have done justice to a dramatic turn in the heart-breaking race for the nomination unless he gives prominence to the sequel—the event which found Champ Clark and William J. Bryan closing the breach between them. The estrangement between these leaders had its inception in the unforeseen workings of a titanic struggle, during which speeches were made by Mr. Bryan which were interpreted by the country as reflecting seriously upon Mr. Clark's political integrity. Mr. Clark had received a majority vote of the convention, and Mr. Bryan's speeches were instrumental in defeating him. He was deeply aggrieved, and it seemed that the breach between the two men would never be closed. The disavowal by Mr. Bryan that he had ever intended to reflect upon the personal or political integrity of Speaker Clark—that he regarded him and now regards him as a 'good, clean, Progressive Democrat'—was met with a fine spirit by Speaker Clark, although he was free to say that he still felt a sense of loss that could not be effaced. The restoration of good relations between the two men followed naturally upon the reaching of a mutual understanding. The country loves a good loser, as was shown in the case of President Taft. It will applaud the magnanimity of Champ Clark, and will welcome the beginning of harmonious relations between the speaker and the secretary of state, upon which so much depends in advancing the success of the administration. The Democratic party is the gainer by the effacement of bitterness between Messrs. Clark and Bryan, and there are no differences to subordinate them as truly great leaders, but brings out in most favorable colors the attractive personal qualities of both men."

Opportunity for Fruit Growers at Summer School.

In its summer school the Massachusetts Agricultural College will give a course for fruit growers which offers a fine opportunity for anyone interested in the study of the subject. Professor Sears has outlined a course which by means of lectures, demonstrations, and ample field exercises, will take up modern methods of propagating, planting, cultivating, pruning, fertilizing, and spraying of fruit trees. The Department of Entomology has ten acres of orchards, including apple, peach, plum, cherry, and quince trees. Of particular interest is the large collection of these fruits on the various dwarf stocks, showing many types of training. The recent revival of interest in dwarf fruits makes these dwarf orchards of especial value to students. There is a smaller one, in these trunks and the leading methods of training grapes. Several acres are used in growing the various kinds of small fruits such as strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, currants, and gooseberries. There are also extensive nurseries of fruit trees, in which the student may see them in all stages of development. The department has a good equipment of orchard and nursery tools of all the principal types, the use of which enables students to learn the value of each type. For other orchard operations, such as spraying and pruning the most approved makes of pumps, nozzles, pruning saws, knives, and so forth are provided. All of this equipment will be at the disposal of summer school students.

Besides the work in fruit growing, courses will be given in dairying, animal husbandry, poultry breeding, and management, practical gardening, horse flower growing, forestry, landscape gardening, elementary and agricultural chemistry, botany, bird life, insects, bookkeeping, handicrafts and practical arts, home economics, rural school problems, home and school gardens, organized play, recreation and penmanship. There will also be a group of courses arranged especially for rural social workers which will take up practical problems in New England agriculture, the church and rural problem, sociological aspects of New England agriculture, rural literature, English agriculture, rural history, the community cooperation in the redeveloping of rural and village schools, and the development of the community.

Bulletins giving full description of the Summer School may be obtained from Professor W. D. Eard, Amherst, Mass.

Only the eastern part of the country and the neighboring islands were considered fit for agriculture. In addition to its poverty in natural resources, the country was further impoverished by Napoleonic wars in the early part of the nineteenth century. In the second half of the nineteenth century Schleswig-Holstein was taken by the Germans. Practically all of its commerce was gone. The peasant farmers were in a most pitiful condition. Yet today, less than a century later, this same Denmark is in proportion to its population, the wealthiest country in Europe."

Denmark is essentially an agricultural country. It has an area of about 10,000,000 acres. More than $50,000,000 worth of butter, eggs and meats are exported by the farmers of Denmark annually. In 1906 the Danes had $208,000,000 in savings banks. Eighty-nine families out of every hundred own their own farms and houses. The small amount of tenancy is due to the fact that land holdings can be easily acquired.

Not the biggest, bluestock type could add a parable to the astonishing facts above stated. Think them over. Poor land. Desolation by war. Robbery of the best lands by a stronger power. General poverty. And now such general comfort, such immense aggregate wealth, such splendid conditions, and all this attained by what?

War? Conquest? Trading? Manufacturing? None of these. By farming of those bleak sand dunes and the rest of the lands, mostly originally poor. The secret? It is on the surface. "Land holdings are easily obtained." That is the first essential to general prosperity.

Second—Co-operation. The farmers of Denmark are the most thoroughly organized in the world. They buy, sell, store, market, slaughter their stock and pack their meats co-operatively. All their milk is handled by co-operative creameries, and cheese factories.

Land easily obtained for actual work. Land easily obtained for actual workers of land and universal co-operation—think what these things would mean for any American state—absolutely any state you may mention—as compared with Denmark.

The above astounding quotation is not from any "Looking Backward" or "Progress and Poverty"—it is from the report of co-operation. Board of Public Affairs and is based on an official study made in Denmark by a state official.

The Man Who Keeps a Dog.

Now, curfew the man who keeps a dog that never, never sleeps, but thru the watches of the night while moon and stars produce their light, with fitted muzzle lays the moon in agonies sick out of tune. At even-fall we seek our coils, with minds untroubled by the by, to woo the flecked goddess—sleep—and taste the joys of slumber deep—when hold and list, and likewise hark, some mangy cur begins to bark. At first he does a solo stant, but soon, another joins the runt, then one by one, more whelps join in to swell the growling, howling din. Night's peace is rudely broke in twain, by dildog, collie, pug, and Dane; each dog or doglet does his share in chasing silence to its lair. We toss, we toss, we tumble on our beds, o' on bang the ceiling with our heads; and wish the men who own the cur were made to sleep on cockle-burs. What right have some to keep such whelps that, with their overlast-ing yelps, make men and women fall from grace and pour forth swear words from their face; some husky mortal ought to grab a heavy seasoned, hickory stick, and kill each dog with mighty blows, and sweat the owners on their nose.—Ex.

Unselfishness in Politics.

Liberty knows no children, and she can wait for them to recognize their kinship. Oliver Wendell Holmes one day said, "You need not be afraid of the truth; the truth is no invalid." You may treat the people roughly and ignore it, but she lives and breathes in the human spirit and you cannot crush the human spirit, and therefore you would rather die than trust to any knowing its orbit, than trust to any source I myself might create. We are an interesting people, we human folk. We are afraid of men who have power and use it wickedly, but we are never afraid of men, and the only people we fear are those who are the men who forgot themselves and served others, and that statue will stand there as an example as long as the bronze will last, for the grave of the other man is trodden underfoot and forgotten and some day is a plowed field again, its quiet crops feed the human race, and he is dead.—Woodrow Wilson.

Manager John B. Daly has secured to open at the Daly Theater, Monday, June 2d, the Haines-Greenfield Stock Company, who will offer a repertoire of plays, changing their program three times a week. This company has been playing Wisconsin and Illinois towns this season, opening their Wisconsin time at the Racine theater and come highly recommended. In their repertoire they have several new plays, namely: "The Man From Arizona," "The Little Country Girl," "Man and His Mate," and "The Innocent Wife." These plays have proven their worth and have helped to make a highly successful season for the company. Their opening play for Monday, June 2d, will be "The Man From Arizona," a semi-western play in four acts full of surprises and laughable incidents from start to finish, coupled with one of the prettiest love stories ever written. One of the best plays of later years. The final curtain being exciting in the extreme then winding up with one of the biggest laughs of the evening. Between the acts vaudeville will be introduced. Prices 10 and 20 cents. Ladies will be admitted free on Monday night when accompanied by a person holding a paid 20c ticket.

Sudden Change to Clover May Bloat Cattle.

With the coming of spring when cattle are changed from dry feed to pasture, to avoid serious loss it is necessary for the farmer to watch carefully for bloat, according to the veterinary department of the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin.

Bloat is a form of indigestion due to the excessive formation and accumulation of various gases in the stomach or rumen. The attack is especially apt to occur when cattle are suddenly changed from a hay diet to green clover or alfalfa. It is most often seen during warm, wet weather, or when heavy dew or rain moistens the foliage.

The chief symptom of bloat is a sudden distension in the left flank, which swells up and appears as light as a drumhead when thumped with the finger. Relief must be immediate, if suffocation is to be avoided, and consists in providing an artificial outlet for the gas by "tapping" the animal. This is best accomplished by inserting a trocar and cannula into the most prominent portion of the swelling. To prevent further gas formation administer a drench of two ounces of turpentine in a pint of raw linseed oil or a quart of new milk.

As a prevention, avoid turning the cattle out until the dew or rain has dried off. In addition, giving a full feed of dry roughage, such as the animals are accustomed to, just before turning them out will be found helpful in preventing this trouble.

"I am willing," said the candidate after he had hit the table a terrible blow with his fist, "to trust the people."

"Yes," yelled a little man in the audience, "I wish you'd open a grocery."

Experimental Potato Farm.—A potato experiment field has been located at Tomahawk by the Wisconsin College of Agriculture. Use of a five acre tract on Cityside farm has been offered by John W. Froehlich and accepted by the college. The Association of Commerce, through Secretary J. W. Elliott and a special committee appointed by President R. C. Timm, will fit the field ready for planting, when it will be turned over to the college workers, who will plant, care for and harvest the crop. The money required by the association for clearing, plowing, and dragging the field will be raised by popular subscription. Experiments with the different standard varieties of potatoes will be made on the field under the direction of Prof. J. G. Milward, assistant horticulturist of the college and secretary of the Wisconsin Potato Growers association. Accurate records, such as are kept by the college in its experiment work, will be kept of the work here and the adaptability of different varieties of soil and other conditions of the Tomahawk district will be determined. Proper methods of culture will also be demonstrated.—Tomahawk Leader.

"Some are born great; some achieve greatness; while others have greatness thrust upon them."

Well, some men are born great; others are born fools. No, Nellie, there is no need of you taking us your trouble. You should never have insisted on your fellow taking you to an ice cream parlor. The best thing for you to do is to sit still in the boat and calm yourself. Get over the idea that you should be treated as a prodigal son every time he comes to see you. When you feel the desire coming on, eat a wafer and then go to the pump. GENTLE ADA FERRIS

John Folsom's Mascot Saved Him Just in the Nick of Time.

When Folsom was sent to the Philippines he told Miss Ferris that he would have something very important to write to her as soon as he had established himself. It was something which he could not say to her then because Ada Ferris was rich and Folsom had his way to make in the world. But when he looked into her eyes he knew that she would wait—that she was the kind that would wait years—perhaps for ever.

It was lonely in Manila, in spite of men friends who took one out to dinner and whom one entertained at one's bachelor quarters. In fact John Folsom had only one real friend—Minnie, his little monkey, who had been captured, a tiny baby, in the forests of Mindanao. She was the dearest and most affectionate creature that he had ever seen. One day he found her perched gravely in front of Ada Ferris' photograph, examining it, evidently with approval, for she made a little chattering noise that signified happiness.

"Some day, Minnie," said Folsom, as she snuggled into his coat, "some day we three will be in a world of perfect happiness." Then he sighed, for he had not written to Ada Ferris so regularly as he had been used to do. Perhaps it was because his promotion came slowly. It could not have been because of Lillith Aintree, Judge Aintree's daughter, who was the belle of the American colony, and who distinctly liked Folsom.

There could not have been a greater contrast than between Lillith and Ada; the one proud, mirth-loving, self-willed; the other gentle, sweet and affectionate. In his heart Folsom knew that his new flame could not compare with the girl whom he had left behind him in Boston. But Ada Ferris was far away and Lillith was near, and to his loneliness he found it impossible to resist her overpowering attraction, her personality, vibrant with youth and his, he knew, as soon as he should say the word that would make her his.

Minnie did not like Lillith Aintree. There had never been any love lost between them. The very first time that Lillith and her mother called at his bachelor quarters—Lillith was giving a tea that day—the little creature ran screaming from her and, climbing the curtain pole, sat at that safe elevation and moved and grinned at her.

"Minnie doesn't seem to like me," said Lillith one day. "Don't you think you ought to get rid of her, John?" (They called each other by their first names now.) "I mean—"

She paused in well-calculated confusion. John knew what she meant. They had been strolling along the water front together and he had never felt her influence so strongly as that day. But at the words a sudden chill fell upon him and before his eyes there rose the gentle image of Ada Ferris, waiting.

Her letter never altered in tone, except that they had become a little more reserved, a little more distant, in response to the unconscious change in his. And ever he hailed between his two loves, now resolutely faithful to Ada and now overpowered by the silent allurements of Judge Aintree's daughter.

he must be clear-headed, for he had to tell Lillith about Ada. And yet he knew she would not care. She would have no scruples about usurping the other's place. To his surprise the monkey left his shoulder and sprang to the lowest branch of the tree under which the hammock hung. Folsom hurried away and presently, coming back with the lemonade, saw something which astounded him.

Lillith, in an access of fury, had reached up and grasped the monkey, and now, holding her fast by the throat with one hand, was thrashing her with the other. The little animal was nearly choked, she could not scream, but with both hands over her head, strove vainly to ward off that shower of stunning blows. Then Folsom came up as Lillith flung the creature from her. Minnie crept sobbing into John's arms. He turned and flushed with passion, stooped gazing at him uneasily.

"I thrashed the little beast," she said. "What did she do to you?" asked John quietly. "She sat on the tree and made faces at me," Lillith answered petulantly. "And I tell you, John, unless you get rid of the beast you must—"

She had meant to say "get rid of me," but something in John's face checked her. "I'm sorry if I hurt her, John," she said. "But the little wretch hates me and I can't bear to be hated. I want to be loved, John," she added, lifting her face toward him.

A sudden loathing for her came with his new understanding. "Lillith," he said, "a woman who would beat a helpless dumb brute would beat a child." "What do you mean?" she cried. But he said no more. Holding the monkey tightly to him he walked away. And Lillith knew. She knew that the mother instinct, which alone can hold a man, had failed her; she knew that she had irrevocably lost him. He had found her out at last.

"Little mascot," said John, when he set Minnie down upon his table "there's a long letter from some one in Boston that we haven't answered yet. Shall we write to her this afternoon?" And Minnie picked up his pen just at that moment and held it toward him.

SECRET OF NATURE FOUND

Fact That It Is Possible to "Taste" Electricity Has Been But Recently Divulged.

In some forms electricity is invisible, while in others it may be seen. The lightning flash and the electric light are easily seen, but the current itself is really invisible to the eye. The sense of feeling can detect the presence of the mysterious element, and the sense of hearing may detect it, and the sense of smell has been known to locate the presence of the wonderful power, but it has just been discovered that we may taste electricity.

Metals of an opposite nature will, when properly connected, throw off a small current of electricity, and this may be tasted by taking a piece of bright, clean tin about the size of a silver dollar, and placing either above the tongue or beneath it, with a silver dollar on the opposite side. Keep the outer edges of the silver and tin apart for a moment, and see if you can detect any taste.

Then bring the outer edges of the metals together with one above and the other beneath the tongue, and instantly there will be a sour taste in the mouth. This is actually tasting the electric current that is produced by the contact of the two metals, and which in making the circuit is passing through the tongue which is very sensitive.

LONG OR SHORT COAT

BOTH HAVE SANCTION OF FASHION THIS SEASON.

In Chiffon or Lace They Are Particularly Becoming—Rich Brocade, Elaborately Embroidered, Are Also High in Favor.

There is no end to the short coats and wraps and each is more chic than the last, though you need time to accustom yourself to their abbreviation. Whether they are so generally becoming as the longer coats and cloaks is a question of taste. Certainly they contrast better with the short skirt of the trotting frock.

Long coats and cloaks for carriage and evening wear are lovelier than ever before, and the triumph of the season is the tiny coat of chiffon or lace usually without lining other than another tone of chiffon.

One of the loveliest cloaks is of embroidered chiffon. The long lines of drapery are exceedingly artistic and the fullness at the top of the coat at the back is held in place by a square shaped tab of exquisite embroidery.

Another cloak is of broadened crepe de chine. At the neck there is a high turndown frill of mousseline de soie.

Embroidered Black Crepe.

The cloak is shirred on a cord at the shoulders and the sleeves and bottom of the coat are also shirred on a cord of the material.

Equally good in its way is the shaped coat of gray charmeuse trimmed with small rose colored silk buttons and cord loops. It is finished with a

COOLER CLOTHES FOR BABY

One of the Problems That the Warmer Weather Poses Forward to the Young Mother.

When the warm summer months confront us the young mother begins to think about cool clothes for baby, and not the least important of the articles required for the wardrobe is the long dress, for baby dare not be exposed to draughts at any time.

The needlework shops are showing an attractive variety of long coats made of crepe de chine or albatross. These can be copied with little difficulty. Purchase a kimono pattern for a baby in long clothes and stamp the border with scallops. Down the fronts and across the sleeves stamp a dainty flower design; either forget-me-nots, rose buds or violets are suitable. White silk of a fine quality should be used to embroider the flowers.

First pad the neck, using white darning cotton for the purpose. Make the padding stitches the length of the petals and cover them with silk, making the stitches at right angles with the padding. Buttonhole the scallops with heavier twisted silk, padding them first with the darning cotton. Tie the fronts together with white ribbon an inch in width. If desired, these dainty coats can be lined with a light quantity of china silk, but they are more frequently unlined for summer use.

CHIC STREET DRESS

narrow turndown collar of the rose colored silk finished with a narrow frill of rose colored chiffon.

One exceedingly attractive model seen recently was of lace, chiffon and silk. At the front the upper part was draped in reverse shawl with a chiffon scarf, which was knotted in a large knot and ends which fell to the bottom of the cloak. The fronts were of lace over which soft silk was draped, falling in folds from the shoulders to the bottom of the garment.

In soft satin and crepe, there are to be had numerous beautiful cloaks. Some of the rich supple brocades are used for superb cloaks and there are plain satins and crepes marvelously embroidered. Other models depend upon lines rather than ornamentation, and these, when successful, are veritable works of art.

One peculiarly lovely model was in supple satin finished with silk stuff which was probably a crepe of some kind. It was in a soft cyclamen tone and was lined with a deep toned smoky gray chiffon over whose surface was scattered a design of primroses in several cyclamen tints. The fronts fell back in soft draped revers to show the chiffon facing.

All sorts of odd little shaped shoulder wraps in chiffon, lace and satin are being exploited by French designers, but many of them are en suite with frocks.

One smart New York shop exhibited a model of black Chantilly lace to be worn with a costly lingerie frock. The front of the coat was ornamented with a large cluster of pink roses.

DICTATES OF FASHION

Flat lace flounces will be approved for evening gowns and are considered smarter than the panner effects. Brocade crepe meter is a new material and promises to outlive both chiffon and velvet in popularity.

Ratine in warm tones of brown is one of the most effective colors in this material. It is very wide and wears well.

It is absolutely essential this season that the slipper should match the color of the gown for evening wear, and the vogue is undeniably artistic.

Green and Bright Colors. Not only in millinery are the brightest of colors to be seen, but also for gowns for home and street wear. These are being shown at the moment, but it will be popular with well-dressed women. The brightest shades of emerald and grass greens are the most modish, and tomato red and very bright flame colors are among the favorites. Then tangerine is particularly popular for millinery and for collar trimmings and for giving touches of color to tailormade and house gowns.

Shoe Horns With Handles. Shoe horns with yard long handles are a novelty which all women will welcome, as by their aid footgear may be adjusted without having to bend the back almost double, thus taking the risk of breaking the corset steels. The round handles of slender walking stick circumference come in polished mahogany or golden oak and the horns in silver or gold plate or in nickel. They may be packed crosswise into a trunk of ordinary size.

NEED A FREQUENT CLEANING

Beauty Specialists Are Wise When They Urge Patrons to Give Their Vails Regular Abutions.

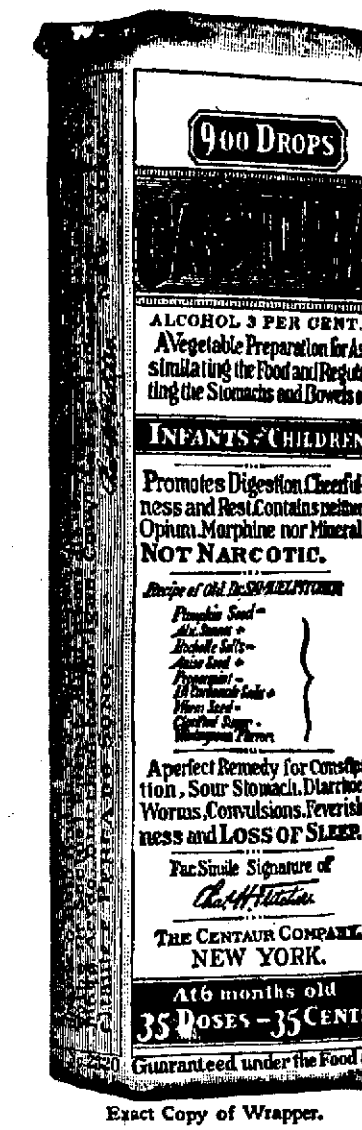

The beauty specialists ask their customers sometimes whether they change their vails frequently and have them cleaned, just as they would other items of their attire, and when the answer is in the negative, they explain that vails are dust and germ collectors, and should really be changed very often.

The white veil gets a bath frequently, for it shows soil so readily that there is no evading it, but every one does not know that other vails need ablutions now and then.

It is not its age, its continued use by mothers through all these years, and the many attempts to imitate it, sufficient recommendation? What can a physician add? Leave it to the mothers." Dr. Edwin F. Pardee, of New York City, says: "For several years I have recommended your Castoria and shall always continue to do so, as it has invariably produced beneficial results." Dr. N. B. Sizer, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I object to what are called patent medicines, where maker alone knows what ingredients are put in them, but I know the formula of your Castoria and advise its use."

HER SHARE IN THE WORK

Mr. Younghusband Certainly Has Right to Be Proud of His Practical Little Wife.

She had made him a present of a pair of green, red, and blue carpet slippers for his first birthday since their marriage, and he was in ecstasies over them.

"I know you'd like them, Harry," she smiled, "it for no other reason than that I made them all myself." "What!" exclaimed Harry. "You don't mean to say that this is all your work? Great Scott! What a genius of a wife I've married!"

"Of course," qualified the young wife, "I bought the uppers, and Mary sewed them together, and I got a man to sole them, but I put on the bows and did them up in the box—and do you know, Harry, I think you ought to be very proud to have such a practical little wife."

How Tuberculosis Is Spread. Based on figures obtained from cases of tuberculosis reported in Cleveland, New York and other cities where thorough registration of consumptives is employed, it is estimated that for every death from consumption in the United States, of which there are on an average 200,000 annually, there are constantly more than five living cases making at least 1,000,000 in all. Of these million living cases, it is estimated that the health authorities have records of not more than 100,000 to 150,000, or one in every eight or ten, and that, for the great majority of cases recorded, no hospital, home or dispensary care is provided. Practically nothing can be done to control the spread of tuberculosis in the unreported cases.

Abner's Preparation. Abner, who worked for the summer residents, told Mr. Burns one morning that he was soon to be married.

"Well, really, Abner," said Mr. Burns, "I'm glad to hear it! I suppose you've made all the preparations and got your wedding fixery ready?"

Abner did not balk at the question, but he grinned sheepishly. "Yep," he replied, "maw, she bound my Sunday coat and put a new collar on't, and I've had my shoes tapped." Judge.

THE RIGHT SOAP FOR BABY'S SKIN

In the care of baby's skin and hair, Cuticura Soap is the mother's favorite. Not only is it unrivaled in purity and refreshing fragrance, but its gentle emollient properties are usually sufficient to allay minor irritations, remove redness, roughness and chafing, soothe sensitive conditions, and promote skin and hair health generally. Assisted by Cuticura Ointment, it is most valuable in the treatment of eczema, rashes and other itching, burning infantile eruptions. Cuticura Soap wears to a wafer, often outlasting several cakes of ordinary soap and making its use most economical.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address Post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."

Would Consider It. "Would you marry a monkey-faced shrimp just because he had inherited a fortune?" "That depends. How much did you inherit?"

His Guess. Bacon—Which is the proper way to eat spaghetti—with a knife or a spoon? Eggbert—With a pitchfork, I guess.

Proper Kind. "What kind of a dog do you think best to guard a hen roost?" "Why not a setter?"

The Man Who Keeps a Dog.

Now, census the man who keeps a dog that never, never sleeps, but thru the watches of the night while moon and stars produce their light, with fitted muzzle lays the moon in accents sadly out of tune. At even-fall we seek our cots, with minds untroubled by the by the bobs, to woo the fickle goddess—sleep—and taste the joys of slumber deep—when hold and hist, and likewise bark, some mangy cur begins to bark. At first he does a solo stant, but soon, another joins the runt, then one by one, more whelps join in to swell the growling, howling din. Night's peace is rudely broke in twain, by bellow, coile, pug and Dane, each dog or doglet does his share in chasing silence to its lair. We toss, we toss, we tumble on our beds, e'en hang the ceiling with our heads; and wish the men who own the curs were made to sleep on cockle-burs. What right have some to keep such whelps that, with their everlasting yelps, make men and women fall from grace and pour forth swear words from their face; some husky mortal ought to grab a heavy seasoned, hickory slab, and kill each dog with mighty blows, and swat the owners on their nose.—EX.

Un-civility in Politics.

Liberty knows her children, and she can wait for them to recognize their kinship. Oliver Wendell Holmes one day said, "You need not be afraid of the truth; the truth is no invader." You may treat the people roughly and ignore it, but she lives and breathes in the human spirit and you cannot crush the human spirit, and therefore I would rather tie my wagon to a star knowing its orbit, than trust to any sources I myself might create. We are an interesting people, we human folks, and that statue will stand there as an example as long as the bronze will last, to fire your hearts forever, while the grave of the other man by trodden underfoot and forgotten and some day is a plowed field again, its quiet crops feed the human race, and he is dead.—Woodrow Wilson

Sudden Change to Clover May Bloat Cattle.

With the coming of spring when cattle are changed from dry feed to pasture, to avoid serious loss it is necessary for the farmer to watch carefully for bloat, according to the veterinary department of the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin.

Bloat is a form of indigestion due to the excessive formation and accumulation of various gases in the paunch or rumen. The attack is especially apt to occur when cattle are suddenly changed from a hay diet to green clover or alfalfa. It is most often seen during warm, wet weather, or when heavy dew or rain moistens the foliage.

The chief symptom of bloat is a sudden distension in the left flank, which swells up and appears as tight as a drumhead when thumped with the finger. Relief must be immediate, if suffocation is to be avoided, and consists in providing an artificial outlet for the gas by "tapping" the animal. This is best accomplished by inserting a trocar and cannula into the most prominent portion of the swelling. To prevent further gas formation administer a drench of two ounces of turpentine in a pint of raw linseed oil or a quart of new milk.

As a prevention, avoid turning the cattle out until the dew or rain has dried off. In addition, giving a full feed of dry roughage, such as the animals are accustomed to, just before turning them out, will be found helpful in preventing this trouble.

"I am willing," said the candidate after he had hit the table a terrible blow with his fist, "to trust the people."

"Gee!" yelled a little man in the audience, "I wish you'd open a grocery!" —Chicago Record-Herald.

Experimental Potato Farm.—A potato experiment field has been located at Tomahawk by the Wisconsin College of Agriculture. Use of a five acre tract on Cityside farm has been offered by John W. Froehlich and accepted by the college. The Association of Commerce, through Secretary J. W. Elliott and a special committee appointed by President R. C. Thielman, will fit the field ready for planting when it will be turned over to the college workers, who will plant, care for and harvest the crop. The money required by the association for clearing, plowing, and dragging the field will be raised by popular subscription. Experiments with the different standard varieties of potatoes will be made on the field under the direction of Prof. J. G. Milward, assistant horticulturist of the college and secretary of the Wisconsin Potato Growers association. Accurate records, such as are kept by the college in its experiment work, will be kept of the work here and the adaptability of different varieties of soil and other conditions of the Tomahawk district will be determined. "Make Wisconsin Best."

Milwaukee News.

A number of the up-to-date push-the-state-ahead papers have been trying to adopt a state slogan that will represent the advancement spirit of the commonwealth.

A slogan to express the progressing spirit—progressing in a commercial, industrial, agricultural, personal, not political, sense is meant—should embrace the spirit of energy and force as generated in and by the people who are to benefit from growth and development, as well as the mere progress of the state. It should be not a mere catchword but a whole story of determination, unity, effort, hope and purpose in a few words.

In creating far too many such slogans, it has been felt that so long as there was a combination of words of such alliteration that they flow off the tongue with a pleasing ripple, the end is reached. Thought is too frequently sacrificed to the ripple.

Let's do something else in this case. Let's create one, or use one that has been created adapting it to the state, that will tell of the one essential in a state's development—the human equation, the determination, without which all the forces of nature are weak. Don't let's say, "Watch Wisconsin Grow." That suggests sitting in the shade and permitting nature to do the work alone. Don't even let's use the word grow. That suggests size only, and size never did anything of itself. Let's suggest something of energy and worth.

Let's make it, "Make Wisconsin Best"—and then live up to it.
